"For nobody, not for myself even. This is the first time they have left their hiding place in my brain."

Can you swear to that?"

"I can and will, if you require it. But you ought to believe my word, sir; I can suppose a die to all matters connected—well, not connected with my profession," he smiled in a burst of that whimsical humor, which not even the seriousness of the moment could quite suppress.

"And what surety have I that you don't mean to use my notes of your machine as coming within the bounds you speak of?"

"None. But you must trust me that far."

Brotherson surveyed him with an irony which conveyed a very different impression to him than any which he had intended. Then quickly:

"To how many have you spoken, dictating upon this device, and publishing stirring my secrets?"

"I have spoken to no one, not even to Mr. Gryce. That shows my honesty to my employer, sir."

"Your keep my secret intact?"

"Entirely so, sir."

"So that no one, here or elsewhere, knows your hopes for the new points in this mechanism?"

"I say so, sir."

"Then I should kill you," came in ferocious accents, "now—here—"

"You would be the only one to own that knowledge. But you won't kill me."

"Why?"

"Need I go into reasons?"

"Why! I say."

"Because your conscience is already too heavily laden to bear the burden of another unprovoked crime."

Brotherson, turning back, stared again with ferocity upon the man who dared to face him with such an accusation.

"God! why didn't I shoot you on entrance!" he cried. "Your courage is certainly colossal."

Sweetwater, without even the hint of humor now, touched the darling detective's lip. Brotherson's anger seemed to grow wilder if, and he loudly repeated:

"A score than colossal; it's sheer mad and—" A moment's pause, then, with irony nauseous—"and quite unnecessary save as a matter of display, unless you think you need it to sustain you through the next few hours of courting. You wish to help me finish and prepare for flight?"

"I sincerely do."

"You consider yourself competent?"

"I do."

Brotherson's eyes fell and he walked once to the extremity of the oval floor ing and back.

"Well, we will grant that, but that's not all that is necessary. My requirements demand a companion in my first flight. Will you go up in the car with me on Saturday night?"

A quick affirmative was on Sweetwater's lips but the glimpse which he got of the speaker's face glowering upon him from the shadows into which Brotherson had withdrawn suggested its utterance, and the silence grew heavy. Though it may not have lasted long on the clock, they each had breathless contemplation of each other's features across the intervening space was of inconsolable moment to Sweetwater, and, possibly, to Brotherson. As the drowning men are said to live, over their whole history between their first plunge and the final rise to light and air, so through the mind of the detective rushed the memories of his past and the fast fading glories of his future, as the rehabilitation of the exile's peril he saw in that sardonic eye, he vociferated an impulsive:

"Yes, I will go!" and paused, caught by a new and irresistible sensation.

A breath of wind—the first he had felt that night—had swept in through the crevices in the spring wall, flapping the canvas enveloping the great car. It acted like a pest to battle. After all, a man must take some risks in this life, and his heart was in this trial of a redoubtable mechanism in which he had full faith. He could not say no to the prospect of being the first to share a triumph which would send his name to the ends of the earth; and, changing the trend of his sentence, he repeated with a calmness which had the force of a great decision:

"I will fall you to anything. I'll ride—" here his trembling hand fell on the curtain shutting off the view of the ship, "the shell takes me with her, so that when you have won it may be the first to congratulate the proud inventor of such a marvel."

"So be it!" shot from the other's lips, his eyes losing their threatening look, and his whole countenance suddenly aglow with the enthusiasm of awakened genius.

Coming from the shadows, he laid his hand on the cord regulating the rise and fall of the concealing curtain.

"Here she is!" he cried and drew the curtain.

The canvas shock, gathered itself into great folds and drew the glories of the shadows from which he had just stepped.

The silver steel revealed—a startling, because wholly unique, vision.

Long did they survey and marvel at it, their turning with beaming face upon the mischief inventor, he uttered a loud hurrah.

Next moment, with everything forgotten between them save the glories of this invention, both dropped simultaneously to the floor and began what seemed an endless examination.

"Orlando!" a Shriek Went Up, "Orlando!"

tenuously to the floor and began what seemed an endless examination.

CHAPTER XXXVII.

His Great Hour.

Saturday night at eight o'clock.

So the fat had gone forth, with no confession to be made on account of weather.

As Oswald came from his supper and took a look at the heavens from the small front porch, he was deeply troubled that there was not presented no obstacle on this point. For there were ominous clouds rolling up from the east, and the whole air had the feeling of high mountains and abrupt chalky cliffs, not light, nor—thought Oswald even to those with feet well-planted upon mother earth.

If the tempest should come up before eight o'clock!

Mr. Challoner, who, from some mysterious impulse of bravado on the part of Sweetwater, was to be allowed to make the third in this small band of spectators was equally concerned at this sight, but not for Brotherson. His fears were for Oswald, whose slowly gathering gravity was not lost upon the stroln which this additional subject for grave thought had been added upon him. As for Doris, she was in a state of excitement which accorded with the past than with the future. That afternoon she had laid her hand in that of Sweetwater, and he had wished him well. She! in whose breast his image was a compelling one, and to had demanded—Oh, shame from herself—a terrible thought to her gentle spirit—he might be going to his death!

It had been settled by the prospective aviator that they were to watch for the secret from the mouth of the greasy workman who was the inventor. The three were to meet there at 8 o'clock, and at 12 o'clock the car and the all-seer's risk. That time was fear, and Mr. Challoner noted the glimpse of Oswald's pallid and anxious face, and, forgetful of the new dent the lantern he carried, shuddered with foreboding, and wished the hour passed.

Doris' watchful glance never left the face which lighted more and more to her than all Orlando's hopes. With the result upon her, was not to weaken her resolve, but to strengthen it. Whatever the outcome of the test for initials, she must stand ready to sustain her lovelld through it. That the danger of early vespering had deepened to oppression, was unnoticed for the moment. The hour of an hour past had been forgotten. Their attention was too absorbed in what was going on below them, for even a gloomed.

Suddenly the clock struck.

"Who is the man whom Brotherson has asked to go up with him?"

It was Oswald who spoke.

"He has never told. He has kept his own counsel about that as about everything else connected with this matter. He simply advised me that I was not to bother about him with any—and he found the assistant beforehand."

"Such reticence seems superfluous, when you have displayed great prudence, Oswald."

"Because I understand Orlando. He needs man's natures like a book. The man he trusts, we may trust. Rumor for, he will speak openly enough. All cause for reticence will be gone."

"You have confidence then in the success of this undertaking?"

"If I begin," a shadow came to be here, "I could not bear to witness his failure. It is a secret told like that I should find it too hard to face him afterward."

"I don't understand."

"Orlando has great pride. If this enterprise fails I cannot answer for him. He would be capable of anything. Why, Doris! what is the matter, child?" I never saw you look like that before."

She had been down on her knees regulating the lantern, and the sudden flame, shooting up, had shown him her face turned up toward his in an expression which verged on horror.

"Do I look frightened?" she asked, remembering herself but lightly rising. "I believe I am a little bit frightened. If—if anything should go wrong, we—we—accident—" But here she remembered herself again and quickly changed her tone. "But your confidence shall be mine. I will not be in his good-angel or—or in his self-command. I will be frightened, but be frightened any more."

But Oswald was not to be thus satisfied. He continued to look at her to vague concern.

He hardly knew what to make of the tolerant feeling she had manifested. Had Orlando her affianced lover been? Had this cold-blooded nature, with its strange self-control and undoubtable but stern views of life moved her to pity and sympathetic soul to more than admiration? The thought disturbed him so he forgot the nearness of the hour, the storm, and all awaiting till a quick respring sound from the hanger, followed by the sudden appearance of an ever-widening band of light over the upper rim, drew his attention and awakened him out to a breathless expectation.

"The full was rising. It was halfway up, and now, for the first time, it was rising to its full height and stood a broad oval disk against the dark sky, the color of the sea. The effect was strange. The hunger that was made brilliant by many lamps, and their shadows darting from side to top and illuminating not only the surrounding trees but the broad face of this spitted disk, roused in the awed spectator a thrill such as in mythological times might have come to the sudden sight of Vulcan's fiery forges. Even the lantern in the hand of Oswald seemed to have its light dimmed by the splendor of the moon.

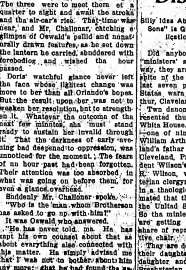
A wind had swooped down from the north, bending everything before it and rattling the huge oval on which their eyes were fixed, as if it would never tear it from its hinges.

"Orlando!" each of each others moods to dismay. The storm had come fast on the verge of the enterprise, and they were going to their ruin.

"Will he dare?" Will he dare?" whispered Doris, as the wind, unwavered, though it seemed near to increase in force, but silenced by the fear which it had awakened.

"He will dare. But will he succeed?" Mr. Challoner," he suddenly shouted, "did you observe the rubber bands on it now?"

Mr. Challoner, disengaging himself from their mutual grasp, knelt down on the lantern to consult the watch.



Billy Idea About Career of "Minister's Son" Is Given a Setback by Publication of a Few Facts.

Did anybody ever anything about "ministers' sons?" No? Well, anyway, they are coming to their own in spite of the old saw. Three of the last seven presidents of the United States were sons of ministers—Arthur, Cleveland and Wilson.

Chester Alan Arthur was the representative of ancestry in the White House. Mr. Arthur was the son of nine children—of the Rev. William Arthur, a Baptist. Grover Cleveland's father was the Rev. Richard F. Cleveland, Presbyterian, while President Woodrow Wilson's father, the Rev. J. R. Wilson, was not only a Presbyterian clergyman, but also a professor in a theological seminary. It is estimated that there are now living in the United States to 250 adult men. No the ministers, through their sons, are getting much more than their share of representation in the executive chair.

They are doing even better through their daughters. Mrs. Wilson is the daughter and the granddaughter of Presbyterian ministers. She will be the seventh mistress of the White House of clerical descent. Abigail Adams was the daughter of a Congregational minister. Mrs. Fillmore's father was a Baptist clergyman. Mrs. Pierce came from the family of a colonial clergyman. Rev. Jesse Appleton, bred of Bowdoin. While Mr. Arthur was president a niece of the McElroy, presided at the White House, as did President Cleveland's sister, Mrs. Hall. Mrs. Benjamin Harrison was the daughter of his first administration. Mrs. Harrison, wife of the grandson of Rev. W. Scott, president of Lombard University.

Altogether, then, three sons of ministers and seven daughters will have lived in the White House during the present century.

Choir Invisible Has a Recruit.

A Kansas man who has lately been abroad reports that the Kansas farmer actually appears on an old fashioned day in a cemetery at Saragossa, Spain. Here the John Deere, presently to be used in the fields, which some day will be used to the choir of angels, whose society he will embellish, and where he will thoroughly blend his voice with the powers of song. God shall say to his angels, "Cease, ye carnal, and list me hear John Deere, a preacher to the kingdom."

The happiest moments of many a man's life were those in which some girl was coaling him for fun.

SLUMS OF EDINBURG

Canyon-Like Streets in the Poorer Quarters.

City Is Not Without Beauty—Princes Street Said to Be Most Impressive of Any Thoroughfares in Europe.

Edinburgh.—Edinburgh has slums that look and smell the thing they are. There is something not only forbidding, but almost threatening in the canyon-like streets of the poorer quarter, with their huge grim tenements built of uncompromising stone and rising high above the nucleus streets. One meets on the Old North bridge, which spans the gulf between two high portions of the town, pale-faced women hooded in their shawls, and bearing in their faces the marks of poverty, hard tasks and vice. One sees also on that historic bridge, however, many a lovely girlish face, many a daughter of the people such as inspired scorn of "Burns" in his best songs. The land is manifestly full of native vigor, and the communists show the discipline of the struggle that they and their ancestors have long waged with a thin soil, a difficult topography and a climate somewhat sluggardly or unduly fond of warmth.

Edinburgh still deserves its ancient name of Auld Reekie, and between its many magnificent views and its self-generated smoke, its stormy skies, and its frowning and mountainous architecture, it has a most engrendeur hard to match in other and more favored cities. Heloyed from the plain enough royal residence, but crowned with a castle which there reposedly and almost insolently dominant a pile as Edinburgh castle. It gives the final touch of something like domesticity to that aloof and high-set mass of gloomy architecture as at night the gleam of lights through a few of its long, silted windows. Nothing can be finer than the sudden holes of afire-sunset bright stars that appear in the stormy skies of Edinburgh on summer evenings. Those aspects of the city suggest nothing less majestic than a Miltonic or Dantesque touch.

It has been said that Princes street of Edinburgh is the most impressive in Europe, and if any such assertion is to be accepted it owes its truth not so much to the stately street and its buildings and monuments as to the magnificent view which, looking from the castle and its slopes would show the rich prosperity of the latest distinction, and the castle and its steep rocks would show the funeral noble eminence within view. The Princes street gardens, too, are very lovely, and there are fine old historic structures along the highway, while the hotels and banks and shops do not look like a church engulfed by an unbreakable with its standing on solid ground. As a matter of fact the structures are both sensible and studious seated states of Sir Walter set, while, is a dignified and beautiful thing, even though it is at war with the austere and awful steep torrents of the vast and wandering pile of Edinburgh castle.

HUBBIES MUST POUND ROCK

New Pennsylvania Law is Put into Operation for the First Time.

Philadelphia.—When six descreting husbands were sentenced to three months' work breaking stone at the house of correction by Judge Gregg there was put into operation for the first time in Pennsylvania a new law passed by the last legislature, which the court declared would materially reduce the cause of wife desertion in this state.

The law empowers the court to commit recalcitrant husbands to the house of correction, there to be placed at work breaking stone, under the penalty, also, of having their wages and earnings paid to the wife. The maximum sentence is three months but this may be extended to six months if the husband shows no will. Ingness otherwise to support his family.

Heretofore the only punishment meted out to the men who desert in this state was a jail sentence, leaving the man's wife and family to be taken care of in many instances, by charity.

ANOTHER unconfirmed report of the death of Menelik II, emperor of Abyssinia, has drawn attention to that monarch's isolated and little-known kingdom, which since the monarch's illness has been governed by a council of ministers. The present ruler's reign began in 1889, when, taking advantage of the disordered state of northern Abyssinia, Menelik proclaimed himself king of kings of Ethiopia on March 12, 1889, and was crowned at Entotto on November 3 of the same year. Has Mangeccia, a natural son of Theodore, made several attempts to regain power, but Menelik defeated all efforts to overthrow him. He conducted his government with firmness and sagacity and steadily consolidated his power.

In the first year of his reign he made a treaty with the Italians, practically placing Abyssinia under their protectorate, they on their part agreeing to lend him 4,000,000 francs. In consequence of disputes with the Italians and their encroachment on his territory and also of differences relative to the Ucciali treaty Menelik mustered a large army and inflicted a serious reverse on the Italian advance guard at Uchalago in December, 1895. The Negus then made propositions of peace but they were unacceptable to the Italians as they included a demand for retirement and also for a modification of the Ucciali treaty.

On February 24, 1896, the Abyssinians concentrated at Adowa and were pursued there by the Italian forces under General Baratieri. The Italian troops advanced against the Abyssinians in three columns, but the configuration of the country permitted Menelik to concentrate his men in an attack on the left column, and the other two columns being prevented—partly by the configuration of the ground and partly it is said by bad dispositions consequent on a want of unanimity amongst the generals—from arriving in time to assist the Italians suffered an overwhelming defeat with a loss of 7,000 men killed and wounded. This caused the fall of Signor Crispi's government, and General Valle was appointed to full power to treat, and an agreement fully recognizing the independence of Abyssinia was signed.

Menelik had three concubines, by whom he had one son, who died at the age of thirteen, and two daughters. One of them, Zeodita (Judith), married a Shoanese who was governor of the Woonoogma Galla, and the other, Romanework, married Ras Michael, governor of the Wollo Galla country.

Menelik married in 1883 Taitou, the present empress. She was a daughter of Betul, a former Ras of Gondar, where the women are remove for their white skins. She herself was a great beauty and very fair. She first married Welde Gabriel, one of King Theodore's generals, but he was killed by Theodore shortly after their marriage. Soon after King Theodore's death she took for her second husband Dedjas Balcha Gesgis, whom she divorced. She was then married for the third time to the governor of one of the provinces, who was subsequently murdered by King John of Abyssinia. She then returned to a convent for a time but there she met and married Haszamach Likarguecho. Then Menelik fell in love with her, and in 1883, all obstacles having been removed, she made him her fifth husband.

Queen Taitou has been Menelik's no children. She has the reputation of being a woman of unusual strength of character and is said to have had great influence with her husband. She does not, however, share his views with regard to the encouragement of representatives of foreign ways, but is much more inclined to discourage foreign intercourse and foreign civilization and to keep Abyssinia and its inhabitants in the same state of crude methods of the old regime. According to report it was she who stiffened the backbone of Menelik during the varying fortunes of the battle of Adowa. It was by her advice that induced him to hold on until the ammunition of the Italian column was exhausted and so enabled him to surround and decimate the force opposed to him. A clever retort is ascribed to Queen Taitou when a foreign representative was impressing upon her the advantages of foreign and more civilized countries, instancing telephones, railways, etc., and the various luxuries of civilized life. "If," she said, "things are so much better and pleasanter over there, why do your people come here?"

The defeat of the Italians greatly increased the prestige of Menelik. He presented President Carnot with the Order of the Holy Ghost and also sent him two tame lions. Afterwards he received negotiations with France, which had lapsed in 1891. He also sent a mission to the czar, and in February, 1897, he concluded a commercial treaty with the French, who in March of the same year dispatched an embassy under M. Lagarde to his court.

In 1898 a British mission under Sir Rennell Rodd was received by Menelik in great state, 20,000 troops being present, and in spite of the efforts of Colonel Leontieff at the head of the Russian mission and Prince Henri d'Orleans, who were endeavoring to induce him to thwart British efforts in Soudan, a treaty was concluded between the British government and Menelik. A curious circumstance connected with the British mission was the fact that the average height of the officials of the mission was over six feet, which fact appears to have greatly impressed the Abyssinians. The chief points of the treaty, which was ratified by Queen Victoria in July, were a settlement of the British Somali protectorate frontier, the keeping open of the trade route from Zeyla to Harrar, and the prevention of the transit through Abyssinia of arms for the Mahdists. In a letter to Queen Victoria Menelik said, "A treaty of peace now exists between our governments, and we hope it will increase in firmness and last forever."

In April, 1898, Lieutenant Harrington of the Bombay army corps—now Sir John Lane Harrington, K. C. M. G.—who had been acting as British vice-consul on the Somali coast, was sent as British agent to Menelik's court, where he remained up to 1900. His firmness and the able management of such questions as arose from time to time between the British and Abyssinian governments gained him the confidence of Menelik and gave him considerable influence in the country.

In October, 1898, Ras Mangascia, governor of Tigre, rebelled and a large force was sent against him, but eventually negotiations were opened up and they settled matters amicably. Since that period Menelik continued consolidating his power, and his great force of character made itself felt to such an extent that peace has reigned throughout all his dominions from one end of the country to the other, the mandates of Menelik have been received with profound respect and implicitly obeyed. One nation after another has dispatched a mission to the court of Abyssinia, and Menelik was until his recent illness in touch with the whole civilized world.

In November, 1909, Menelik was struck with cerebral paralysis and was stated to be at the point of death. A proclamation in his name was sent to the chiefs preaching peace and unity and obedience to the successor he had selected, Lij Yasu. Ras Tesamma was to continue to be the guardian of his heir, and his majesty called down the curse of the Almighty on anyone who should attempt to oppose the successor. After this he recovered his bodily health, but was not considered sufficiently to attend to his work. He suffered another relapse in the summer of 1908, but has made a satisfactory recovery. Early in 1909, he had a paralytic stroke which, depriving him of all speech and almost of motion, similarly incapacitated him from all work. From this, notwithstanding his age, he has on more than one occasion been reported dead, and although there is more have been at once denied the fact remains that for the last two or three years he has been a mere figurehead, the government of the country having been carried out by a council of ministers under the presidency of Lij Yasu, the heir apparent, and during this period it is doubtful whether he has been seen by any one but a few select court officials.

Lij Yasu, the heir-apparent, is the son of Menelik's daughter, Schoagasch, and Ras Michael, and was born in 1897.

Voyagers whose ways are them from Northeast of Suez" may have a smattering of Djibouti but to the average person Djibouti is practically unknown. Suffice it to say that, although situated in the French Somaliland protectorate, it is practically the only port that serves the country of Abyssinia.

From Djibouti a single track (metre-gauge) railway runs to Dire-Dawa, some 35 miles inland. The trains run twice a week and the journey frequently takes 14 hours to accomplish, passing through some of the most desolate desert country imaginable.

Dire-Dawa has grown up around the railway terminus, and as it is some 3,000 feet above the sea level is much cooler than Djibouti. The place is not very large, but the wide streets and whitewashed buildings give the place an air of space and cleanliness. There is a large Arab and Somali settlement adjoining. Here one comes under Abyssinian officialdom and one's baggage has to pass the Abyssinian customs, usually not a very trying ordeal.

At Dire-Dawa travelers to Ade Ababa have to arrange their own caravans for the journey, both mules and camels are available, but usually mules are taken, as they cover the journey in much quicker time than camels, which are usually employed for heavy baggage and merchandise. One has choice of three routes from Dire-Dawa to the capital—the Cher-cher route, by which one travels along the Cher-cher, mountain range through fine forest and scenery, and the Hirna-topped hills. This route is rather longer than the others, but is by far the most comfortable, as it is cooler, and one may purchase fresh provisions—milk, eggs, and chickens—from the small Abyssinian villages that one passes en route. Camels are unable to take this track, owing to the many steep ascents and descents, so can only be managed by mule or donkey.

The second route is via the Asabot, passing along the foot of the Cher-cher range and joining the former route near the Hawash river. This route passes through the flat Danakil country, through great forests of mimosa trees and occasional open plains, where one meets much fine game, enormous herds of cattle and camels guarded by Danakil shepherds armed with spears and curved knives. No provisions can be purchased on this route, but it is fairly good going except during the very dry season before the rains begin, when water is apt to be scarce.

The third route, the Hilan, runs farther north in the Danakil country, and, though the best for irrigation on account of the great heat and long stretches that have to be made from watering place to watering place.

From Tchoba it is two days' journey to Gondaburka at the foot of the Balidi pass. From here track rises nearly 900 feet, in sheer ascent, and the steepness of the pass makes it impossible to simply cut along the mountain side, and at times one is above and at times below the level of feet. From Balidi the road is very uninteresting, and about two days' journey brings one to Ade Ababa.

The view of the city as one approaches is very fine. A large circle of hills surrounds it, and on a small eminence rises the palace in the center of the circle is built the "mesbi," or emperor's palace. There are literally any buildings of importance, and the small house of the emperor, a large collection of small houses and native buildings.

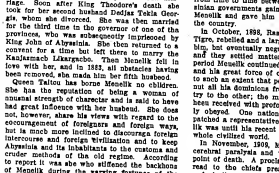
CROSSING THE HAWASH FORD



OLD FRENCH FORTRESS

The first white settlement within the present limits of Vermont was made in the summer of 1666, when Sieur de la Motte, a captain of the Carignan regiment, with a few companions of French soldiers, was sent to what is now known as Isle La Motte, near the northern entrance to Lake Champlain, to erect a fort, which was part of a chain of fortifications extending south from the St. Lawrence river. This fort was dedicated to St. Anne, the mother of the Virgin, and here a chapel was built in the fall of 1666 Fort St. Anne was used as a rendezvous for 600 French veterans, 600 Canadian inhabitants, and 100 Indians, under command of Marquis de Tracy, this being a force sent to subdue the Mohawks. Probably this fort was maintained only a few years, but Isle La Motte was long a favorite stopping place along this great natural highway, and it is reasonable to suppose that the site of the French fortress never again became wholly a wilderness.—National Magazine.

Woman in Japan.

Japan is said to have been progressing by leaps and bounds, as far as the condition of women is concerned. The empress was the first to make an onward movement, sending a certain number of promising girls each year to be educated in America at her expense. Kindergartens have been started in quite young children, and every child is required to attend a school on the first term after completing its sixth year. There has been a woman's university in which the teaching is said to be of a high order. There is a girls' high school attached to it. Many young women and ladies are being educated in Europe.

The largest hospital in Japan has been built for work on the Suez Canal.

STREETS OF NOTE

Writer Names 12 of World's Greatest Thoroughfares.

London's Center of Book and Newspaper Publishing Has Been Awarded the Hass—New York Is Given Fourth Place.

London.—Which are the twelve most famous streets in the world? The question is extremely difficult to determine, for there are two or three factors to be taken into account, factors which the average man is apt to overlook when trying to solve the problem. For one thing, a street, to come within this category, must be well known to folk of every civilized nation, and not merely to those of the country it belongs to. For another, there must be a consensus of expert opinion at least that this street is worthy of being reckoned among the world's leading thoroughfares in any case; and thirdly, the name of such a street, wherever the road may be, must be one which age and wonder recognize as song as they bear it, or at any rate it must be thus recognized by a very large percentage of travelers, readers and educated people.

Taking those characteristics as our guide, says a writer in the London Weekly Telegraph, it is probable that the following list of twenty includes all the best known streets in the world, and from these the dozen most famous streets would doubtless have to be chosen. The twenty celebrities of this sort include:

Regent street, London.
Oxford street, London.
Strand, London.
Fleet street, London.
Cheapside, London.
Whitehall, London.
Princes street, Edinburgh.
O'Connell street, Dublin.
High street, Oxford.
Champs Elysees, Paris.
Rue de Rivoli, Paris.
Unter den Linden, Berlin.
Avenida, Lisbon.
Foochow road, Shanghai.
The Bund, Shanghai.
Nevski Prospect, St. Petersburg.
Collins street, Melbourne.
Burke street, Melbourne.
The Broadway, New York.
Fifth avenue, New York.

These include, as will be seen, nine British streets, two French streets, two American streets and one each in Russia, Portugal and Germany. It may be taken for certain that no Italian or person whose opinion was worth having would deny the claim of three twenty to be reckoned among the most famous streets of the world, however much it might want, or suppose, the inclusion in that category of one of the "sights" to be avoided.

Bearing, from this list I think we should be able to pick out the chief dozen after some trouble. We are not now looking at this matter from the point of view of beauty, or trade, or size, or antiquity; we are simply considering the point with regard to fame and renown, whatever be its cause, as operating to give the street the widest degree of popularity. And, taking that view of it, I think we must at the start rule out Whitehall and Oxford street from the London half dozen, while similarly the Nevski Prospect and the Rue de Rivoli may be left out of the European section. This decision would reduce our number by four, thus leaving us with sixteen, from which we have yet to choose.

Now, though O'Connell street (see Sackville street), Dublin, is one of the most beautiful in our islands, and has a very characteristic air of grandeur, I oughtere, I do not think it is nearly well known outside this kingdom as are several others in our list here. So we may, however reluctantly, put it on one side. Probably, at the head of Shanghai would have to give way to the Foochow road in popularity; we can omit that also from further consideration here, famous as it is all over the extreme east. Whilst brings down our still existing list to fourteen. But the category of the "best" is yet reduced.

Rome, from this list I think we should be able to pick out the chief dozen after some trouble. We are not cannot. In the months of September and October quite abundant quantities of dead water fowl are found every morning below the fall, on the shore, that the surgeon of the fort for along time have called upon them; besides the fowl they find also several score of dead fish, also deer, bears and other animals which have tried to swim the water above the fall; the larger animals are usually found broken to pieces. . . . I was told at Oswego that in October or thereabouts much game is sometimes killed at the foot of the falls, that a man in a day's time can gather enough of them for several beds, which feathers they sold for a dollar a bed. On my asking if I asked the French if this was true, they told me they had never seen such a thing in the twenty years they were picked off the dead birds, there might be some truth in it.

Toward the close of the eighteenth century, Isaac Weld, Jr., made the following observations: "Having reached the margin of the river, we proceeded toward the great fall, along the strand, which for a considerable part of the way either consists of horizontal beds of limestone rock, covered with gravel, except, indeed, where great piles of stones have fallen from the sides of the cliff. These horizontal beds of rock in some places extend very far into the river, forming points which break the force of the current, and occasion variously eddies along particular parts of the shore. Here and there among the hollows of fishes, squirrels, foxes and other animals, that unable to stem the current of the river above the falls, that occasionally drive their carcasses in this manner; because, as the water is very shallow, an abundance of birds found dead below the falls, there are no other cities than those so long exposed to the action of the water; as swans, geese, ducks, water hens, coots and the like.

"And very often great flocks of them are seen going to destruction in this manner; they swim in the river above the fall, and so are carried down lower and lower by the force of the water, the fowl commonly delight in being carried with the stream, so here they indulge themselves in enjoying this sport. For a long time, the swiftness of the water becomes so great that it is no longer possible for them to rise, but they are driven down the green glide and perish. They are observed when they draw nigh the fall to endeavor with all their might to take wing and leave the water, but they

Great Sacrifice of Animal Life in Niagara Cataract.

Birds Especially Are Victims, While Geese, Ducks and Squirrels, Foxes and Bears Also Meet Death in the Seething Flood.

New York.—The Niagara pitfall or "swan trap," as appropriately dubbed by a reporter, deservedly claims considerable attention from the local ornithologists of that region, and their reports show that a great deal of interesting material is gathered in this connection. These observers, as in other more remote, rue the fact of this alluring pitfall, which yet they laud for their helplessness. With many birds and animals, it has been an ever recurring phenomenon that they have noted more or less irregularly in the historical records of this country. These dozens or more buried notes have been sometimes always easily access fresh provisions—milk, eggs, and chickens—from the small Abyssinian villages that one passes en route. Camels are unable to take this track, owing to the many steep ascents and descents, so can only be managed by mule or donkey.

The second route is via the Asabot, passing along the foot of the Cher-cher range and joining the former route near the Hawash river. This route passes through the flat Danakil country, through great forests of mimosa trees and occasional open plains, where one meets much fine game, enormous herds of cattle and camels guarded by Danakil shepherds armed with spears and curved knives. No provisions can be purchased on this route, but it is fairly good going except during the very dry season before the rains begin, when water is apt to be scarce.

The third route, the Hilan, runs farther north in the Danakil country, and, though the best for irrigation on account of the great heat and long stretches that have to be made from watering place to watering place.

From Tchoba it is two days' journey to Gondaburka at the foot of the Balidi pass. From here track rises nearly 900 feet, in sheer ascent, and the steepness of the pass makes it impossible to simply cut along the mountain side, and at times one is above and at times below the level of feet. From Balidi the road is very uninteresting, and about two days' journey brings one to Ade Ababa.

The view of the city as one approaches is very fine. A large circle of hills surrounds it, and on a small eminence rises the palace in the center of the circle is built the "mesbi," or emperor's palace. There are literally any buildings of importance, and the small house of the emperor, a large collection of small houses and native buildings.

SEVERS HIS CHILD'S HEAD

Mother Falls Unconscious, Leaving Small Baby to Drown After Father Commits Horrible Crime.

Chicago.—In a shocking domestic tragedy, involving the death of two small children, has occurred at Parker Kingsford, a peasant named Steve Jakovich bid some backnotes under a mattress in the home of his wife. Mrs. Jakovich did some washing for a neighbor, and when she returned found the money gone.

Her father was watching him, and, seized with a fit of ungovernable passion, the took up an ax and chopped off the boy's head. The mother, who was nursing a baby in the next room, heard the noise and coming in saw the child's head roll on the floor. She fainted, and the murderer, seizing the baby, left unattended in its bath, was drowned. Jakovich was arrested.

A woman, won't mind her answer, when asked her age, replied: "I am a Band concert—Monday, Nov. 10.

Found, Scotch collie pup. See Clarence Jeffers and pay expense.—Adv.

Mrs. C. B. C. Baker entertained the U. and U. B. Tuesday evening.

A. Robertson returned this morning from a business trip to the twin cities.

H. Houpt of St. Hilaire was attending to business matters in town Wednesday.

The frost is on the pumpkin, all right, and not a few potatoes got nipped, too.

Louis Boyer of Coleraine, a former resident of Red Lake Falls, arrived in the city today for a visit with old friends.

A. D. Berry and family, who have been residents of the city for the past two years, are moving to the farm near Dorothy.

Mrs. Krell has leased Mrs. Wm. Zaiser's store building on Main street and is conducting a dressmaking establishment.

Rev. David V. Richardson has about recovered from his recent illness with the measles and there will be services at the Presbyterian church Sunday as usual.

J. P. Gray has gone to Big Falls on a business trip.

Mr. and Mrs. John Mehle of Plummer were shopping in town today.

The Ladies Aid of the Presbyterian church will meet at the home of Mrs. Carver Saturday afternoon, Nov. 1, to tie comforters.

Mrs. Henry Vollmer, after a visit of two weeks with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Paul Cyr, left Friday to return to her home in Huron, South Dakota.

H. L. Premo and family have moved from Brooks to Red Lake Falls and are occupying the Michel cottage which Mr. Premo recently purchased.

The quarterly report of the First State Bank of Oklee, showing a very satisfactory condition of the affairs of that institution, is published in today's paper.

As I desire to clean up shop for this season, I wish that anyone indebted to me would come and settle up by the latter part of next week.—Mrs. Paul Brunelle.—Adv.

The quarterly report of the Farmers and Merchants State Bank at Oklee, showing their institution to be doing a flourishing business, is published in today's paper.

If anybody wishes to have comforters tied, leave word with Mrs. F. L. Farley or Mrs. Ed. L. Healy, and the Ladies Aid of the Presbyterian church will be glad to do the work.

Louis Polasek has bought from Alex Cote the house on Third street until recently occupied by A. L. Reichert and family. Mr. Reichert has leased the Fisher house on Main street.

Mr. and Mrs. Ed. J. Porter drove to Crookeston last Saturday to visit his sister, Mrs. Supenant. They also went to Brooks to visit her brother, Frank L. Cyr, and other relatives.

Jos. Belair is a patient at St. Vincent hospital, Crookston. Last week he underwent an operation for appendicitis. He withstood the shock of the operation well and is getting along nicely.

The Sunshine, Headquarters of Santa Claus. We are busy unpacking our 1913 Christmas stock. Our first order of dolls is on display. Come in and see them. There are 275 dolls in number—popular prices, and any kind of a doll in the market—you will find them at Hoidale's corner of Santa Claus, The Sunshine.—Gr.

Misses Gertrude and Etta Henne-mann came from Crookston Saturday to meet their guests at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Geo. F. Hennings until Sunday afternoon, when they were taken to Crookston in the Hennings car. Saturday evening the members of the F. and P. B. and their husbands were entertained at the Hennings home at a card party given for the Misses Hennemann. A delightful evening was spent playing progressive whist.

A. Wallmor of Plummer was attending to business matters in town today.

Jos. Remke of Mentor was attending to business matters in town today.

Homer Parenteau has purchased from W. H. Fisher the house on Main street. Mr. Parenteau is not to have possession until after the expiration of a lease of the place that A. L. Reichert has.

A. D. Roepelle and family are now living in town in their cottage until recently occupied by L.A. Dusterhoft and family. Mr. Dusterhoft has leased the Balash cottage across the track from the Great Northern depot.

The Heinsmouth house in "the hollow" has been leased by E. Chartier, the deputy county auditor. Mr. Chartier's sister, Mrs. Rouse, has come from Tower City, N. Dak., and is keeping house for her brother.

The boards of county commissioners of Pennington and Red Lake counties met jointly last week to view ditch number one in Pennington and Red Lake counties that has been completed by the contractors, Forestal and Feyen. Glen Martin, the engineer on the job, met with them. They found the ditch completed according to contract, but the roads along the ditch were not up to specifications. These will be put in better condition before the work is formally accepted.

Small boys with slanies should be cautious about venturing on the ice above the Sulphur dam, at least until heavy ice has formed. Comparatively thin ice when supported by water will bear a heavy load, yet when the water runs from underneath the ice, as it does during the day, when the water wheel is being used, it leaves a thin sheet of ice unsupported by water that is a dangerous trap for small boys. So it will be well for boys to be very careful until there have been a few more days of hard freezing. There is a fine coating of ice on the river which no doubt tempts boys to be reckless. They should not forget that the river is much more dangerous than it used to be.

On Monday at Goodlily, Rev. Fisher officiating, Miss Clara Lance was united in marriage to Mr. F. Vandeln, a well known young farmer. And there was an exceedingly large attendance, many being out from Crookston to attend the ceremony and the festivities, the contracting parties being well and favorably known here. The bride is a sister of Headsman Bus and Sheriff Scully of this city.....A double wedding was held Tuesday at Goodlily, when Miss Daisy Murrell and Hector Arel and Miss Nellie Murrell and Edmund Blaths were united in marriage by Rev. Fr. Theelen. A wedding dinner was served after the ceremony at the Arel home. In the evening a supper was served at the Martell home, 150 guests being present and a good time was enjoyed until in a late hour in the morning a double wedding. Mr. and Mrs. Bushey will live in Crookston while Mr. and Mrs. Arel will live on their farm—Crookston Times.

Bankers of Duluth and Superior had been listening to an address by Joseph Chapman at the Duluth Commercial club. The evening's festivities were finished, and a group of the financiers had wandered into the reading room and were discussing old jokes.

One man, who is credited with being able to remember as far as the San Francisco minstrels—Birch, Wambold, Bernard and Backus—was asked what was the oldest minstrel joke.

"Well," he said, "there were nine trels before my time—Pell's for instance, and Christy's. The oldest, and worst joke that I can remember, however, is this:

"'Mr. Johnsing, fob what purpose was Eve created?'

And the trusty right end man responded: "Well, Mr. Interlocutor, Ah reckon she was created fob Adams Express company.'"—Duluth News-Tribune.

NELSON GAVE OELORME A CLOSE RUN IN THE THIRD WARD.

HUNT ELECTED IN SECOND—HELM AND POIRIER ALDERMEN AT LARGE.

THESE ARE ELECTED.

Mayor—I. Lemieux.
Aldermen at Large—Rufus Poirier, Jos. J. Helm.
Alderman First Ward—Geo. F. Hennings.
Alderman Second Ward—Sam E. Hunt.
Alderman Third Ward—Noel Delorme.
City Treasurer—E. G. Buse.
Assessor—Vern Healy.
Justices of the Peace—E. G. Buse, Jos. Toupin.

The city election held Tuesday was a lively performance than was anticipated and brought out a pretty good vote. Hunter's withdrawal as a candidate for alderman from the Third ward at first seemed to simplify the situation. However, there were people who seemed to have no thought of allowing the election to go by default and the day before 60 2.K.Nelson so that he would stand for being a "sticker" candidate. A lot of the stickers stuck—65 of them—but that wasn't enough and Noel Delorme is to be the new alderman from the Third ward.

Sam E. Hunt defeated Leo Steinert, 59 to 30, and consequently is re-elected alderman from the Second ward. Rufus Poirier was re-elected alderman at large and Jos. J. Helm will be the new alderman at large. E. H. Bourdon, the third man in the race, fell a little behind.

An interesting contest was that of Jos. Toupin and Vern Healy for assessor, Healy being the winner. No one filed as a candidate for justice of the peace but the names of Jos. Toupin and E. G. Buse were written on the ballot more times than the names of any other people and they are elected.

It can be said that Mayor I. Lemieux was re-elected without opposition, though since there was no contest some people availed themselves of the opportunity of giving friends complimentary votes. In this particular feature of the election "Looks" Steffl led in the race. He got 2 votes in the First ward, 4 in the Second ward and 13 in the Third ward. Geo. F. Hennings, alderman from the First ward, and E.G. Buse, city treasurer, were re-elected with out opposition. In the First ward N. Blais received 5 votes for justice of the peace.

Following is the vote by wards:

First Ward.

Mayor—I. Lemieux, 43.
Alderman—Geo. F. Hennings, 59.
City Treasurer—E. G. Buse, 43.
Assessor—Vern Healy, 51; Jos. Toupin, 9.
Justice of the Peace—E.G.Buse, 4
Alderman at Large—Rufus Poirier, 28; Jos. J. Helm, 38; H. H. Bourdon, 21.

Second Ward.

Mayor—I. Lemieux, 57.
Alderman—Sam E. Hunt, 59; Leo Steinert, 30.
City Treasurer—E. G. Buse, 66.
Assessor—Vern Healy, 44; Joe Toupin, 27.
Justice of the Peace—Jos. Toupin, 7; E. O. Buse, 18.
Alderman at Large—Rufus Poirier, 45; Jos. J. Helm, 51; H. H. Bourdon, 41.

Third Ward.

Mayor—I. Lemieux, 103.
Alderman at Large—Jos. J. Helm, 100; H. H. Bourdon, 71; Rufus Poirier, 91.
Alderman—Delorme, 86; Nelson, 65.
Assessor—Toupin, 77; Healy, 76; Buse, 115.
Justices of the Peace—Buse, 27; Toupin, 16.
Following is the vote for the whole city:

Jos. Toupin 113

Justices of the Peace.
(Two elected.)

E. G. Buse 49
Jos. Toupin 22

CASTNER—HOLZMAN.

Wedding of Local Interest Took Place Monday Night.

A wedding of much local interest took place Monday, November 3, at 8 o'clock in the evening. The parties to the happy affair were Mrs. Bird Castner and Mr. Rudolph Holzman and the ceremony was performed in their new home which Mr. Stebbins has constructed in the western part of the city. The ceremony was performed by Judge H. G. Buse and was witnessed by Mr. and Mrs. M.Christensen, sister and brother-in-law of the bride.

This wedding is an affair about which Mr. and Mrs. Holzman's friends have been much concerned. It was reported that Mr. and Mrs. Holzman were married several months ago and were trying to fool their friends. Just as many people had come to the conclusion that that was true they "up and got married" and fooled them again.

Miss Riordon's solos and the orchestra selections will give the program an added attractiveness.

Reserved seat tickets will be 50 cents, general admission 35 cents, children 25 cents.

YOUNG WOMAN TOOK HER OWN LIFE

MRS. HERMAN LILLO SHOT HERSELF THROUGH THE HEART.

DEATH INSTANTANEOUS — WOMAN'S MIND WAS DERANGED.

Mrs. Herman Lillo, a young woman twenty-four years of age, living on a farm near Lillo postoffice in Equality township, took her own life last Friday by shooting herself through the heart.

The act was committed while the woman was in a state of mental derangement. Mrs. Lillo's mind had been affected for several months and it had been planned to have an examination conducted when her husband returned from Canada, where he had been for the season. On greed the conniving Mrs. Lillo had made attempts at self-destruction but she had been carefully watched. The rifle shells had been hidden, but on Friday she found one and one was all she needed to carry out her purpose.

Mrs. Lillo was in her room upstairs in the house, when she fired the shot from a heavy rifle. Her mother-in-law and other people downstairs did not hear the shot because a gasoline threshing outfit was running near the house, but they were attracted by the noise and Mrs. Lillo's falling body. It is believed that Mrs Lillo placed the butt of the gun on the floor and leaned over until the muzzle was against her heart and was able to pull the trigger. The bullet passed through her body, penetrating the heart, and lodged in the ceiling. The woman's youngest child, a boy five years old, was in the room when she shot was fired. The little boy said his mother kissed him goodbye and then fired the gun.

A little baby born to the Lillos last spring died and Mrs. Lillo inher deranged mental condition believed she had killed the child. That delusion may be responsible for to a determination to take her own life.

Sheriff Chas. Pellman and Fred Cyr, deputy coroner, went to the Lillo home Saturday, after an investigation they decided that an inquest was unnecessary, since all circumstances pointed to suicide.

SAW MILL SHUTS DOWN.

End of Season's Run at Thief River Falls.

Tuesday evening at six o'clock the Thief River Falls Lumber company closed down their mill for the season and having accomplished a very good season's work. The manager estimates that the season's saw will contain 12,000,000 feet of lumber and 275 men have been employed in the mill and the payroll will amount to about $16,000 per month and about $104,000 during the summer. The planing mill will be operated all winter and will employ about 40 men. As soon as the season's saw is cut in the spring the mill will again start operations.—Thief River Times.

Seriously Injured.

Martin Lee, aged 31, married, of Perley, Minnesota, was seriously injured at the Stiner bridge about two miles east of Stiner, late this afternoon. Lee was standing near a heavy plank when a pile driver slid down the leaning guide, toppled over, plank near which the unfortunate one of the heavy timbers hitting the plank was standing. The loose end of the heavy timber was thrown upward, striking Lee a terrific blow on the head and chest. Two ribs were broken, the right side of the jaw was broken and the left side badly dislocated. The inside of the man's mouth was so badly swollen that it was extremely difficult to set the fractured jaw bones.—Thief River Falls News-Press.

HIT BY AUTO.

Walt known Crookston Man is Seriously Injured.

Between 12 and 1 o'clock today, while on his way to dinner, County Commissioner J. D. McPher stepped in front of C. L. Stebbins' automobile, was knocked down and struck his head on the ground rendering him unconscious of the brain which may result seriously. Mr. McPher was able to get to his feet and was taken to the home at once by Mr. Stebbins, but later could tell nothing of how the accident happened.

He was in front of Girard's store when Will Nelson passed him in an auto and stopping invited Mr. McPhee to ride home and the latter stepped from the sidewalk to the middle of the street where Nelson's car was standing. Stebbins was coming across the Jacobs addition bridge making for home, and when the latter stopped Stebbins turned out on the proper side to pass the gentleman from Mr. McPhee got up, appeared somewhat dazed, but said he was not hurt outside of a pain in his shoulder, and continued Mr. Stebbins from any blame. "He was going too slow to hurt me," said Mr. McPhee. However, after being taken home McPhee grew worse and could not remember anything about how the accident happened. A bad bump was discovered on his head, and Dr. Hodgson said the outcome might be serious.

At a late hour this afternoon an improvement was noted in Mr. McPhee's condition.—Crookston Times, Monday.

CROOKSTON AND THIEF RIVER WET

PROPOSITION TO VOTE OUT SALOONS FAILED IN BOTH OF THE CITIES.

Though the "dry" polled a heavy vote in Thief River Falls and Crookston, in Tuesday's election then over before, the "wets" were victorious in both cities by substantial majorities.

Thomas Moore, who had the support of the republicans and anti-saloonists let he generally campaigned a Crookston, was elected mayor by a majority of 252 votes over P. Larson, the present incumbent and representative of the anti-saloon party.

The socialists were able to elect but one of their candidates before Peltier for alderman in the Second and didates being defeated.

City Clerk Childs, who has been in office for 10 years, was defeated by the non-partisan candidate, Louis Hemming, by about 150 votes. Mr. Erickson won the treasurership with ease.

JOSEPH LAUNDRY DEAD

Pioneer Merchant of Terrebonne Passed Away Monday After Brief Illness.

Joseph Laundry, one of the pioneers of Terrebonne township and a merchant in that village, passed away at Crookston after a brief illness Monday morning, Nov. 3. Mr. Laundry had been in poor health for week before his death. He was taken from Terrebonne to Crookston last Thursday, where he received medical attention in order that he might be benefited and be brought home as soon as possible. It was thought that he would recover when pneumonia developed and his death came rather suddenly.

The funeral was held at St. Anthony's church, Terrebonne, of which deceased was a member, at 10:30 o'clock Wednesday morning, Rev. Fr. LeRoux officiating. Interment was at the church cemetery.

Joseph Laundry was the senior member of the firm of Jos. Laundry & Son of Terrebonne. He was sixty years of age and long been a resident of the county and had many friends who will be grieved to learn of his death. He is survived by his widow and ten children, all living in Terrebonne except one son, Joseph, who lives in Canada. The oldest son, Peter Laundry, has been associated with his father in business and is the postmaster at Terrebonne.

BIG GAME HUNTING

The Lid Will be Off Next Monday Morning Nov. 10.

Meet everybody who is a "good old sport" is planning to lay his old rifle by in readiness for the opening of the season for big game next Monday, Nov. 10. Others will try to make it be a big rush to the timber country fifty miles and more east of here.

Every year a few deer have been killed in Red Lake county and those several to be a limited number. They lie in the country a few miles east of town waiting to be slaughtered, so it is possible that local hunters may be able to make a bag.

DISTANCE ALONE GOVERNS RATES

RAILROAD FREIGHT TARIFFS UNDER CASHMAN ACT ANNOUNCED.

WILL, IF SUSTAINED BY COURTS, PUT END TO SPECIAL PRIVILEGES.

St. Paul—(Special)—The Cashman distance railroad freight tariff, one of the most hitherto fought measures of the last legislature, now has the hearts in this neck of the woods. The new schedule under which the various railroads operating in Minnesota will, beginning with the first of next year, do business as required by the Cashman act, has been promulgated by the railroad and warehouse commission and interested shippers and transportation committees over the state are now supposed to be studying its terms. To accept the offhand verdict of the Twin City publications, which assailed the act from all sides and angles when it was up for consideration, hades is the right. Wonderful benefits of all kinds is being dangled before the eyes of shippers and therefore fevered terminals and a rate mixup without precedent predicted. That some have before favored spots and industries the big cities especially—are going to be hit by the new order of things is certain, but honestly after a comparison of the old and new tariffs I fail to see the threatened "hades" and of it that was heralded. The Danish can of the Northern Pacific, will probably be fit and bit hard because of advantages that the schedule rivals, but that Minnesota is a big state, the new tariff is a radical departure from old rate making methods and ideas and it would be useless if in all appearance of this character some one was not hurt in the overturning. One thing is sure, the law frees the special favored rate gaps out of business. Distance alone governs the cost of shipment and any favors granted one community by a railroad must be extended to other towns on the same system and enjoyed by a similar distance. Of course the schedule rivals, but that is going to be attacked in the courts. Such is inevitable; but I fail to see where the opponents of the new idea are going to win. An examination of the new schedule shows nothing scary about it. If anything, it looks good. If I were a state official or interested in things political I would not speak ill of the new rates or busy myself with the opposition. The kickback is entirely too dangerous to monkey with.

State capitol happenings this week will be the complete wiping out of the old position of the state Public Auditor Iverson by W. E. Lee of Long Prairie. The latter is a state official of long experience, which was behind closed doors, landed with the other men at the finish both came out smiling. Mr. Iverson said that he would be a candidate as to the line of talk indulged in, but his visitor was not so communicative. Mr. Lee said that the publican gubernatorial nomination was practically a stand-off and that he got into the game Mr. Lee said he would be satisfied that the governor Eberhart out of the executive chair, but that was the limit they may have in mind. It might pay at least to take notice.

The federal income tax is now a law and it looks as how distributing blanks to those who come under its provisions. Last week nearly 2,000 of these blanks were distributed in St. Paul alone. All incomes in excess of $4,000 by the tax and it was at first thought that the heads of the various departments at the state capitol would have to pay, but it seems that this is not the case. Salaries are not taxable under the new law.

THE COUNTY CHAIRMAN.

DON'T SHOOT!—YOU RECKLESS HUNTER

MERE MAN ALWAYS IN DANGER WHEN BIG GAME HUNT IS ON.

LEeal big game hunters say that during the past few seasons there has been much reckless shooting in the county east of town, especially during the first few days of the season and the marvel is that some people have not been killed.

When the inexperienced hunter goes out after big game he nerves on edge, he is threatened with "buck fever" and he almost invariably shoots at the first moving object that he sees, be it a deer, a cow, a man or a deer. Fortunately he usually misses, but sometimes he hits the mark, and there's tragedy.

With the opening of the big game season next Monday it will be well for hunters to make the big game slogan "Don't Shoot!" Don't shoot until you know what you will hit if you hit anything.

NARROW ESCAPE FROM DROWNING

BOY IN WATER TWENTY MINUTES WHILE RESCUERS WORKED.

WAS ALMOST EXHAUSTED WHEN TAKEN FROM ICY WATER.

The tragedy which many people have feared since the warm weather of the past few days has softened the ice in the Clearwater river almost "happened to be" Wednesday afternoon when Henry Judge, a boy nine years old, broke through the ice and was in the icy waters twenty minutes making a desperate fight against exhaustion before rescuers could get to him.

The boy wandered, as boys will, if the ice would hold him and he ventured on it. He was about half way across the river about half way between the Stinert Milling company's dam and the bridge when the ice gave way. Fortunately he came to the surface at the point where he went down and fortunately again Otto Steinert was standing on the river bank when the boy went down. Mr. Steinert grabbed a pike pole and slid it across the ice to the boy. The pole happened to pass directly over the hole and the little boy grabbed it. It was then necessary to get a boat, for the ice would support no one, and after the boat was secured it was necessary to cut a path through the ice for the boat. This took considerable time, though it was done with great desperately, and the little fellow was in the cold water about twenty minutes, which no doubt seemed like twenty hours. They were trying moments, too, for the many people watching the fight, and especially so for the boy's mother, Mrs. John Judge.

The people on the bank called to the boy to "hang tight" and the little fellow fought gamely, though before the men to the boat, Chief of Police Cyr and Otto Steinert, got to him he imperilled them to hurry for he couldn't hold on much longer and was exhausted when taken from the ice. He was almost exhausted when taken from the water. He was hurried to Ade home where a physician was summoned. Though he got a bad chill, he is getting along well and it is believed he will suffer no ill effects from his trying experience.

It is probable that other small boys will profit by his experience. It may now be possible to persuade them to keep off the ice until a hard freeze makes it perfectly safe.

Limited Train in Wreck.

The Oriental limited, crack train of the Great Northern railway system arrived in Grand Forks at 1:30 o'clock yesterday morning, but a delay being caused by a wreck of the train at Genoa, Wis., in which Engineer Frank was probably fatally injured, and five laborers seriously injured. The cause of the accident and accident could not be learned. Number 4, the new train that is being run in place of No. 2, which is now being sent around by the Fargo Surrey cut-off, did not arrive until about 1 o'clock last evening, being nearly 11 hours late.—Crookston Times, Tuesday.

DIAZ A REFUGEE; ABOARD U. S. SHIP

GIVEN ASYLUM ON WHEELING ON INSTRUCTIONS FROM WASHINGTON.

WAS TO HAVE BEEN SHOT

This the Excuse for Fear of the General—No Protest Has Been Received From Huerta, As Yet.

Washington, Oct. 29.—General Felix Diaz was given asylum in the American consulate at Vera Cruz and on the cruiser Wheeling at the direct instructions of the United States government, called a few days ago by Secretary Bryan to Consul Canada, instructing him to shelter Diaz if his personal safety were endangered.

Necessity is Questioned.

Nothing has been heard from the Huerta administration in the way of protest against the extension of asylum to Diaz. There was some disposition in the state department to question the real necessity for refuge, but it was believed no objection would be made by Huerta to his presence on the American warship and that the Diaz party will be free to transport to a liner running to Havana or some northern port without molestation.

Appeals for Protection.

Vera Cruz, Mexico.—General Felix Diaz is on board the American gunboat Wheeling, lying in Vera Cruz harbor. The general appealed to the American consulate for protection and was taken on board the vessel.

Jose Sandoval and Cecilio Ocon, two Mexicans, and Alexander Williams, an American newspaper man, who had made similar application to the consulate, were also taken on board the gunboat.

General Diaz and his companions once on board the Wheeling, soon recovered their equanimity, but relicarded their belief that they were to have been shot.

Diaz to Be Shielded Temporarily.

The flight of Diaz from Vera Cruz to refuge on the American gunboat was much discussed at the rear Admiral Fletcher was notified by Secretary Bryan that political refugees can be shielded only temporarily. Admiral Fletcher is in command of the American ships in Mexican waters.

It was believed that Diaz and his friends will ask to be placed aboard an American bound ship and that, until such disposition could be made of them, Admiral Fletcher will permit them to remain aboard one of the United States ships in Mexican waters.

LARGE CROWD IS FOR THAW

Cheer Lustily at Mention of Fugitive's Name—Prisoner Granted Continuance.

Rochester, N. H., Oct. 29.—Governor Felker, after hearing both sides, granted the request of Harry K. Thaw for a further continuance in the extradition proceedings, setting Nov. 4 as the final date on which his attorneys may file a supplementary brief bearing on the contingency that should a returned against their client by the New York county grand jury. A continuance to that day was had here requested. William Travers Jerome, who opposed the delay, will be allowed two days to answer the new brief.

Probably 3,000 persons gathered at the city hall to see Thaw and many crowded into the rooms where the hearing was held. It was a Thaw crowd and when former Governor Stone of Pennsylvania, who appeared for Thaw, declared that the semi-incest of the people of New York and New Hampshire was that his client had been punished sufficiently, there was a demonstration of approval so lusty that Attorney Jerome ordered the room cleared. Officers attempted to carry out the order but made little headway and the spectators remained.

Incendiary Origin Suspected.

Whoosa, Minn., Oct. 29.—Fire in the heart of the business district resulted in heavy loss at the McNie book store and badly damaged the old postoffice building, a block occupied by offices and two of the leading retail establishments. Fire Chief Wm. C. Norton said the fire was evidently set. The similarity of the origin to other fires recently, he says, leaves no room for doubt.

Dies Under Savage Circumstances.

Chicago, Oct. 29.—Mrs. Lillian Lamport, a North Shore society woman and the wife of the head of Harland W. Lamport & Co., dynamo manufacturers, was found dead under peculiar circumstances by Dr. H. C. Wilson.

Busch Leaves Fifty Million.

St. Louis, Oct. 29.—The will of Adolphus Busch, the millionaire brewer who was buried here Saturday, has just been probated in St. Louis and disposes of holdings aggregating $55,000,000. From semi-official sources comes the prediction that a trust company will be formed to handle the vast interests of the will. It is believed Charles Nagel, former secretary of commerce and labor, now counsellor for the Busch family, will head the trust company. No detail as to the disposition is given out.

Robbers Shoot Illinois Cashier.

Aurora, Ill., Oct. 27.—Two automobile bandits driving a big yellow touring car attempted to hold up the State Bank in Addison, Ill., a small suburb of Chicago, in a daylight robbery, and when resistance was offered began firing at the men behind the bank case. E. Butterman, assistant cashier, fell mortally wounded at the first fire. The robbers then fled. Cashier Edward Fisher, who was threatened with death unless he produced $15,000 "in five seconds," outwitted the robbers.

THREE BATTLES IN SOUTH COLORADO

HOTTEST FIGHTS SINCE STRIKE, MARK BEGINNING OF MARTIAL LAW.

CASUALTIES OF THE CONFLICT

Mine Guard Killed, Four Union Men Shot and a County Marshal Wounded in the Fray.

Berwind, Colo., Oct. 30.—Three battles, the hottest fought since the strike of coal miners in southern Colorado began, marked the first day of martial law in this district. One mine guard killed, four union men wounded, two children of nonunion men shot, one mine guard missing and a county marshal wounded, were the casualties of the three fights, one here, one at Tabasco and the other at Hastings.

Most Serious Fighting.

It was the hastings that the most serious fighting occurred and it was there that the mine guard was killed and the strikers wounded. The "tent camp" had been hummed in on two sides by the mine guards, who climbed the hills of either side of the canon during the night and began shooting into the camp at daybreak.

Mine officials had been notified that Marshal Robinson with eight men on his way to the camps and when the fighting started they made a rush out of the stockade in an attempt to locate the marshal's party.

Only Six Shots Fired.

Not more than 25 guards were detailed to Hastings when the miners attacked them, and for almost an hour the battle was waged. Then the strikers, who numbered 200 or more approximately 300 men, succeeded in driving the guards slowly back to the mine.

While fighting outside of the stockade, Pinard Angus Alexander was killed. Angus and Alexander had shot a few shots from within the log, the fighting being at close range at that time and according to Angus, one of the four who had attacked the guard fired a bullet through Alexander's head.

A Live Battle.

At Tabasco the children were only slightly injured, though it is from this fight that the one gained is reported wounding. The battle here was of a nature almost identical with that of the Hastings fight.

A force of militiamen from the Tabasco tent company which reached the three camps in the territory, by virtue of martial government, closed every saloon. No attempt was made to disarm the guards, who are still taking the utmost vigilance to protect the camps.

Many houses in the camps were penetrated by bullets. Strikers are not in the hills. All are heavily armed.

Eight Thousand Coal Miners Striking

Denver, Colo., Oct. 29.—Although it is approximately six hours, the commander of the Colorado National Guard moved to southern Colorado mining fields, where martial law was established, to direct personally the operation, because of rioting among the 8,000 strikers.

Troops Result of Riots.

As the result of a day's rioting call was issued by Governor Ammons for two of two Greek strikers and the wounding of the deputy sheriffs at Berwind. Governor Ammons ordered 1,000 state troops to the coal fields at once to restore and maintain order. In order that there shall be no laxity, Governor Ammons announced that he would personally direct the movements of the troops.

Three troops of cavalry, two batteries of artillery and a company of infantry went on a special train to Trinidad, where they joined five companies of militia. The entire command of Colorado towns on a special train reached Trinidad early morning. Five hundred soldiers will start later.

Coal Probe Hearing Begins.

Washington, Oct. 30.—Final hearings in the series of investigations, which investigated the West Virginia coal strike, were begun today. Senator Kenyon will conclude the portion of the inquiry relating to the control and operation of the coal fields on Paint Creek and Cabin Creek, investigations of which resulted in violence and bloodshed.

1,500 Telegraphers Won't Strike.

Chicago, Oct. 29.—There will be no strike of the 1,500 telegraphers of the Rock Island system. Points at issue were adjusted after new scales of pay and conferences conducted through G. Walter Dow, attorney and assistant commissioner of mediation and conciliation.

Thousands Attend Duke's Wedding.

Geneva, Switzerland, Oct. 30.—The Duke of Cro and Miss Nancy Leiter of Chicago were married today in the church of Carouge by Abbe Blanchard at St. Joseph's church here. The ceremony was crowded and several thousands of the inhabitants of Geneva assembled outside and cheered the bride and bridegroom as they entered the church. After the wedding breakfast at the Beau Rivage hotel, the Duke and Duchess of Cro left today for Paris.

Women Decide on Fighting.

Los Angeles, Cal., Oct. 30.—Women will be given an opportunity to vote on the prize fight question in Venice, the beach city near here, on Nov. 4, when an initiative petition for the prohibition of boxing contests is submitted at an election. Opposition to boxing developed after the recent death of Pugilist John Young, from the effects of a blow received in a prize ring. Politicians say the women voters of Venice seem about even-ly divided on the question.

AMERICAN CAVALRY POLICING THE MEXICAN BORDER

BAD GALE ON LAKE SUPERIOR

ANXIETY IS NOW BEING FELT FOR MANY OF BOATS.

Storm Similar to One That Wrecked Nine Vessels in 1905.

Duluth, Oct. 30.—Threatening to tie up navigation here, a 25-mile gale, accompanied by snow and low temperature, swooped down here. A light fall of snow covered the ground, with more promised by the weather observers.

Any vessels overdue at the port are believed to be in shelter behind Whitefish point, or other shelter. A big sea and heavy surf prevailed on Lake Superior. A fleet is held here because of the storm.

The most real winter weather of the season struck the western portion of the Northwest and Canada Tuesday and has now reached Duluth. A northwest blizzard, heavy snow and low temperature prevails here and there will continue some hours, according to forecast.

All of Saskatchewan and many provinces of the Northwest were in the grip of the cold wave. Q'Appelle reported 2 below zero and zero was reported all over Saskatchewan. Snow is falling over a wide area and it is expected that the fall will be more heavier in this district.

Intensified by the high wind, the 24-degree temperature is far from comfortable to Duluth citizens who were ungeared for the violent change. Warnings of the storm are being sent all points on Lake Superior and all mariners are displaying caution.

So far, no reports have been received here of any lake disasters. Practically all of the boats which cleared Monday, however, are without wireless apparatus. Lake men assert that weather conditions are very similar to those preceding the big storm of November, 1905, when the steamer Mataafa crashed into the government piers here and nine men perished. During the same storm, eight other vessels were driven ashore within a radius of ten miles.

BURNING STEAMER IS SAVED

Takes Fire at Sea, but Captain Floods the Hold and Makes Landing.

Halifax, N. S., Oct. 28.—The British freighter Sywell, bound from Barbadoes for Havre, put in here with her cargo of 12,000 bales of cotton on fire.

On Friday morning when 380 miles southeast of Halifax, fire was discovered in the fore hold. It had gained such headway that the crew could not meet at white heat, but the engineers succeeded in cutting holes in the deck through which steam poured and extinguished the fire.

A gale was blowing and a heavy sea was running. The steering gear became fouled and the ship for a time was helpless. When the steering gear was put in order, Captain Brooks headed for Halifax for fear the fire and the hold was flooded.

Poet Escapes English Deportation.

London, Oct. 29.—The home secretary announced that he will not order the deportation of Harry Kemp, American verse writer, who has just finished a 21 days' prison sentence for crowding the ocean as a stowaway on the Oceanic from New York. President of Hampstead has promised to look after Kemp and see to it that he does not become a public charge at least for a time.

T. R. Leaves Rio Os Janeiro.

Rio de Janeiro, Oct. 26.—Colonel Theodore Roosevelt left Rio Janeiro by a special train for Sao Paulo. The ex-President came from Sao Paulo by a representative of President Penha and by all the ministers, the diplomatic corps, members of parliament and the higher officials. The crowds cheered the departing visitors. Earlier in the day Colonel Roosevelt, accompanied by the foreign minister, Dr. Lauro Muller, and a committee went on an excursion to Petropolis.

Wilson Second Term Discussed.

Washington Oct. 28.—Political Washington gossiped about President Wilson's speech at Carnegie hall, Philadelphia, when he declared: "If you think too much about being re-elected, it is very difficult to be worth re-electing." Prominent Democrats, familiar with the president's point of view, declared he was not giving the slightest concern to anything but the present term. "I don't care a continental about the second term," the president is quoted by some of his friends as having said not long ago.

WILSON ATTACKS MATERIAL INTEREST

OPPOSED TO THINGS THAT IN-FLUENCE FOREIGN POLICY.

NO TERRITORY BY CONQUEST

President Morality and Not Expediency Must Be Governing Motive Toward Other Countries.

Mobile, Ala., Oct. 29.—President Wilson in a speech before the Southern Commercial congress, delivered a veiled attack on what he termed "the material interests" that had influenced foreign policy. He made several comments in their relations with the republics of Latin-America. Although Mr. Wilson did not mention Mexico as the stricken country, he devoted his entire speech to a description of the degrading influences which foreign concessionaires had upon the internal affairs of some of the Latin-American countries.

What Speech May Mean.

With the Mexican situation uppermost in the president's mind at the time, his address was interpreted as an arraignment of those responsible for conditions which have been charged with causing the present chaos. Such a construction, however, was not apparent.

All of Saskatchewan and many provinces of the Northwest were in the grip of the cold wave. Q'Appelle reported 2 below zero and zero was reported all over Saskatchewan. Snow is falling over a wide area and it is expected that the fall will be more heavier in this district.

Intensified by the high wind, the 24-degree temperature is far from comfortable to Duluth citizens who were ungeared for the violent change. Warnings of the storm are being sent all points on Lake Superior and all mariners are displaying caution.

So far, no reports have been received here of any lake disasters. Practically all of the boats which cleared Monday, however, are without wireless apparatus. Lake men assert that weather conditions are very similar to those preceding the big storm of November, 1905, when the steamer Mataafa crashed into the government piers here and nine men perished. During the same storm, eight other vessels were driven ashore within a radius of ten miles.

Gives Creed of U. S.

"The development of constitutional liberty and revolutionary rights, the maintenance of national integrity as against the encroachments of any sort," he said, "I want to take this occasion to say, too, that the United States will not again seek to add to its territorial area by conquest. It will not seek to make conquest of territory by conquest. It will be satisfied to observe an honest and fruitful use of the territory she has, and the only way in which we can see the duties of friendship to see that from the frontier the material interests made, objective. Such a thing is not a national entity. Mortality and not expediency must be the touchstone that guides us, and we must never condone iniquity.

Sao Paulo Cheers for Colonel.

Sao Paulo, Brazil, Oct. 29.—Colonel Theodore Roosevelt left Rio Janeiro by a special train for Sao Paulo. The ex-President came from Sao Paulo by a representative of President Penha and by all the ministers, the diplomatic corps, members of parliament and the higher officials. The crowds cheered the departing visitors. Earlier in the day Colonel Roosevelt, accompanied by the foreign minister, Dr. Lauro Muller, and a committee went on an excursion to Petropolis.

Washington, Oct. 27.—Representative Carey, of Wisconsin, caused a feast three young women in the cozy retail telephone exchange to choke on their chewing gum and led the entire force simultaneously to declare him "a horrible, mean old thing." The Wisconsin statesman in conducting a crusade against what he terms "the quite erable telephone service" attended in the national capital. He charged that the telephone company employed "young and tempered persons."

A SEETHING BATTLE OF WITS

CAMPAIGN IN NEW YORK CITY IS SO TERMED.

Ally of Sulzer Trains Guns on Leaders of Tammany—Sulzer Confines Activities.

New York, Oct. 28.—With election day only a little more than a week off, the campaign for municipal offices in Greater New York has suddenly developed within the last few days into a seething battle of wits, of bitterness, of charges of graft in public office and of political trickery.

This new order of things was largely brought about by the entrance into the campaign of John A Hennessy, "executive auditor" of the state, political appointee of Governor Sulzer, the deposed governor, who himself has returned to luxury as a member of the state assembly. It is on Hennessy, rather than on his late chief—the deposed governor—that all eyes are turned, and from his lips come statements, charges and countercharges that have caused an awakening of interest among voters and led the Tammany leaders to plan counter-charges.

From from investigations of state departments executive auditor Hennessy has entered the local campaign, telling of what he alleges his investigations have uncovered and challenging the occupants of state and city offices and their political associates to reply.

Opposing what he termed "State rule," Hennessy entered the local campaign with alleged disclosures of irregularity that have come near overshadowing all else. Meanwhile Sulzer is confining his activities to the Sixth assembly district, where he heads the Progressive nomination.

Leaders of Tammany hall, have expressed belief that Sulzer's activity in the campaign will be resented outside the Sixth district, and that their candidate for mayor, Edward E. McCall, and other Tammany nominees will benefit in other parts of the city.

FIRST OPERATION OF LOCK

Panama Canal on Pacific Side Is Used Commercially for First Time.

Panama, Oct. 27.—The ships Inca and Cristobal, No. 27, which have been working at the Pacific entrance of the Panama canal, successfully passed through the locks at Pedro Miguel.

Later the pirate ships of the railroad steamer, at Paired was lifted to the level of Lake Miraflores and on its way to the Culebrebra cliffs where it will begin excavating.

The Panama-Pacific dredge constitutes the first complete operation of the Pacific entrance of the canal.

Kenyon Attacks Without Gift.

Washington, Oct. 29.—The congressional practice of appropriating a year's salary for the widow and children of senators and representatives dying in office, was attacked by Senator Kenyon of Iowa. He introduced a resolution declaring it the sense of the senate that the practice is "without warrant of law," and should be discontinued. Mr. Cummins also withdrawn temporarily because of a technical point.

U. S. Will Not Crop Milk Probe.

Washington, Oct. 28.— Secretary Houston has issued a statement saying that the department of agriculture has no intention of abandoning bacteriological examination of milk or of the government's cleanliness and fitness for human consumption.

Governor Asks Aid of U. S.

Washington, Oct. 28.—Governor Governor Gago of California telegraphed the state department asking that the government use its good offices in behalf of Dr. Gaylord Judson Rand, who has been arrested at Kingston, Ireland, on a charge of killing his wife. Mr. Gage said his daughter was a humanitarian worker and had always herself into difficulty while seeking homes for starving children of Dublin slums. His request was transmitted to Ambassador Page at London.

Decision for Paris Men.

Paris, Oct. 27.—Decision for man has just made its appearance in a Paris theater for the first time, and caused a mild riot. Shortly before the curtain rose on Verlaine's theater on Le Boulevard Mesdames, two young men took seats in front row stalls. When they turned in order to converse, survey the audience a party of amazement went up from all their near neighbors. Both had donned white silk shirts with soft full collars with V-shaped openings in front.

CHARLES G. GATES DIES IN WYOMING

MINNEAPOLIS MILLIONAIRE DIES OF HEART FAILURE ABOARD TRAIN.

IS LAST OF FAMILY LINE

John W. Gates, His Father, Died Two Years Ago After a Remarkable Career As Financier—Fortune Is Quite Large.

Minneapolis, Oct. 30. — Charles G. Gates, the Minneapolis millionaire, died at Cody, Wyoming, in his private car Tuesday of apoplexy. Death was preceded by 24 hours of sluggish heart action, not considered serious until shortly before his death. Mr. Gates went to Cody on Sept. 28 following advice of New York physicians that he must have out of door exercise.

The day of his arrival, he went 20 miles into Shoshone canon on a big game hunting trip and returned to Cody Saturday to prepare for his return to New York.

Slight Stomach Indisposition.

His departure was delayed by a slight stomach indisposition and Monday night his heart action weakened. Tuesday afternoon he became visibly worse, failed to respond to stimulants and died. He was attended by his private physician, Dr. Montgomery and Mothersell, who had been with him constantly since he left New York in September.

The body was immediately sent East under instruction from Mr. Gates' mother, Mrs. John W. Gates, in New York. Mrs. Charles G. Gates was in a private car Uniontown, Pa., at the time of his death. Burial will undoubtedly be beside the body of his father, John W. Gates, on the Hudson river just out of New York. A magnificent mausoleum, said to be one of the finest in the country, is now under construction at the Gates family burial plot.

Leaves Large Fortune.

Men who had some knowledge of the business affairs of Mr. Gates say that his fortune cannot be placed at less than $15,000,000. No one in Minneapolis can say whether there was a will, but it is thought that there is not, in which event the entire estate will go to the widow. Estimates of the wealth of John W. Gates when he died at Paris in 1911 varied widely, but it was fairly fixed that he had $25,000,000. Mrs. Gates and Mrs. Charles G. Gates were the only heirs of the wife of the latter and he have split it equally.

Leaves Residuary Legacy.

John W. Gates, in his will, did not leave the bulk of his estate to his son—instead he made his widow, Mrs. Bellora R. Gates, the residuary legatee. He bequeathed to her the house in Chicago and an annual income of $150,000 during her life. The estate is liable for his benefit which amounted to about $3,000,000. The trust was to survive during the son's life.

It was understood at the time the elder Gates made his will that all his widow would turn over to the son the portion of the estate bequeathed to her, sufficiently large to make their shares approximately equal.

Family Line Ends.

With the death of Charles G. Gates, at 37 years of age, the line of a spectacular family ends. John W. Gates, the father, died two years ago after a career that electrified the world.

Ship Sights Volturno Lifeboat.

Boston, Oct. 30.—A badly smashed lifeboat of the burned steamship Volturno was sighted in midocean by officers of the Cunarder Tuscania, Toronto, which arrived from Hull. The Tuscania circled the boat several times to make sure no living soul was in the lifeboat.

French Aviator is Killed.

Rheims, France, Oct. 30.—Another French army aviator, Quartermaster Sergeant Yenal, has been killed. He was flying alone for the first time. His machine had reached a height of 300 feet when it made a sudden bank to the side and the aviator was thrown out and killed.

London, Oct. 30.—Sir Ernest H. Shackleton has announced his intention to start on another Antarctic expedition next year.

Women Decide on Fighting.

Los Angeles, Cal., Oct. 30.—Women will be given an opportunity to vote on the prize fight question in Venice, the beach city near here, on Nov. 4, when an initiative petition for the prohibition of boxing contests is submitted at an election. Opposition to boxing developed after the recent death of Pugilist John Young, from the effects of a blow received in a prize ring. Politicians say the women voters of Venice seem about even-ly divided on the question.

Thousands Attend Duke's Wedding.

Geneva, Switzerland, Oct. 30.—The Duke of Cro and Miss Nancy Leiter of Chicago were married according to rites of the Catholic church by Abbe Blanchard at St. Joseph's church here. The church was crowded and several thousands of the inhabitants of Geneva assembled outside and cheered the bride and bridegroom as they entered the church. After the wedding breakfast at the Beau Rivage hotel, the Duke and Duchess of Cro left today for Paris and the Netherlands.

TO AWAIT POLICY OF U. S.

FOUR GREAT NATIONS MAY JOIN IN ELIMINATING HUERTA.

Great Britain, Germany and France Send Notes of Reassurance to Washington.

Washington, Oct. 30.—Three European nations, Great Britain, Germany and France, have agreed to adopt no new policy toward Mexico until the government of the United States can submit for their consideration a definite plan for the future treatment of the revolution-torn republic in Central America.

That a request of the powers to await a proposal regarding Mexico from this government had been made and that the three great European nations had yielded to the request, was announced by Secretary Bryan.

President Wilson was enroute to Washington from the Southern trip the announcement was made and the secretary of state did not indicate what would be the nature of the contemplated negotiations with the foreign governments. The president arrived late at night and conferred later with Mr. Bryan.

The note to be presented to the powers has been delayed until but the belief prevails that reasonable time will be given to the announcement from the Huerta government in Mexico of the result of last Sunday's election before action is taken.

That this announcement would be that the election of a new president had failed because of the insufficiency of the vote cast in the opposition of officials here and it is believed President Wilson and his advisers are considering on the theory that some corrected effort must be made by all the governments interested in Mexico to rid that nation of the domination of General Huerta.

RECORD FARGO COLD WAVE

Four Below Zero is Lowest Temperature for Season in Seventeen Years Recorded.

Fargo, Oct. 29.—With the mercury standing at 4-degrees below zero at midnight Tuesday, the coldest October weather of the present season was recorded here in the southern half of the Red River valley.

The present cold spell is one of the coldest ever early experienced, to records of the local weather station which have been kept here since 1897. Changing from Indian summer weather here Monday to zero Tuesday, the temperature fell rapidly.

The change in temperature was accompanied by a heavy wind storm, which was carried down upon the lower river valley from the North before a wind which at times gained tremendous velocity. Conditions resembling a midwinter blizzard prevailed.

Rate Case in Final Court.

Washington, Oct. 30.—The Shreveport rate case, involving the first attempt of the interstate commerce commission to determine, what to change rates wholly within a state when a case before the supreme court of the United States for oral argument. Railroads traversing Texas and Louisiana are seeking to have the court set aside the interstate commerce commission order and compel them each to reduce their rates from Shreveport to Texas points, or to increase their rates for similar distances.

Interpretation of Tariff Law.

Washington, Oct. 30.—The Sherman anti-trust act, Quartermaster Sergeant Yenal, has been killed. He was flying alone for the first time. His machine had reached a height of 300 feet when it made a sudden bank to the side and the aviator was thrown out and killed.

London, Oct. 30.—Sir Ernest H. Shackleton has announced his intention to start on another Antarctic expedition next year.

STATE NEWS IN BRIEF

MANY SPORTSMEN ARE IN MINNESOTA

RECORD HORDE OF HUNTERS POURS IN FROM TWENTY-ONE STATES.

WILL MEAN NEAT REVENUE

435 Licenses Are Issued to Non-Residents—State Commission Agent Gives Statistics for Season and Draws Conclusions.

St. Paul.—Hunters from twenty-one states are tramping over the game fields of Minnesota to prove for themselves that Minnesota is the nimrod's paradise. Never in the history of the state game and fish commission has there been such a rush of sportsmen as at this season, according to H. A. Rider, executive agent of the commission, who has issued 435 small game licenses to non-residents. In 1911 there were 287.

Have Come for Years.

Many of the visiting sportsmen have been coming to the state for years and their success in the past not only has encouraged them to return but to tell their friends of the great sport to be had in the forests and fields of Minnesota.

They came this year from nearly every section of the union and even from Canada, from New Hampshire in the east and California in the west; from Quebec and Florida. Naturally the greater number of the visitors is from the neighboring states of Iowa, South Dakota and Wisconsin. Illinois hunters seem to be partial to Minnesota, as more than fifty residents of Chicago have been supplied with permits to shoot in Minnesota during the present season.

The records of the commission show that licenses were issued this year to citizens of Michigan, Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, Arkansas, Pennsylvania, Indiana, Ohio, New York, Massachusetts, New Jersey, Maryland, Alabama, West Virginia, Kentucky and Montana in addition to the states previously mentioned.

Five Here From Florida.

Five Florida, long represented as an ideal country for hunting, five sportsmen have come. Among them are Rev. E. E. Madeira, formerly of St. Paul, but now resident of St. Petersburg, Fla., and Mr. and Mrs. Charles Ringling, formerly of Baraboo, Wis., but now at home in Sarasota, Fla., and S. C. and F. W. Long of Jacksonville.

Every non-resident taking out a small game license in Minnesota pays $10 for the privilege. These fees make a tidy source of revenue for the state. Mr. Rider is of the opinion that the revenue collected is only a small advantage compared with the economic benefits derived by the state from the influx of hunters.

SECOND FARM TOUR PLANNED

Southern Minnesota Association Will Equip Another Flying Squadron for 31 Counties.

Mankato.—The Southern Minnesota Better Development league is planning on another Southern Minnesota tour similar to the successful one just held.

Secretary John D. Deets is corresponding with the Commercial clubs in the larger towns in Waseca, Dodge, Steele, Olmsted, Winona, Wabasha, Goodhue, Rice, Le Sueur, Scott and Dakota counties, with a view to securing their cooperation in making the tour a success.

It is proposed to have this run the week of Nov. 17, provided the weather is favorable. Good speakers will be secured, and such subjects as better farming and good roads will be brought to the front.

The arrangements for the annual meeting of the league are under way. At a meeting of the executive committee, to be held in this city Monday, the program will be prepared. The constitution provides for the annual meeting on the first Tuesday in December, but the Southern Minnesota Medical society will meet in Mankato that day, filling all the hotels, so only the officers will meet on Dec. 3, and will adjourn the meeting until the next day.

It is expected that each of the thirty-one counties in the league will be represented.

Little Falls "White Way."

Little Falls.—Despite a storm which forced a postponement of the parade, the big feature of the "white way" and home-coming day celebration, Little Falls electrical display, the largest event of its history Saturday night when fifteen blocks were lighted. The celebration began at noon Saturday and lasted until Sunday morning. Governor Eberhart and Charles R. Vesaly of the state board of control delivered the principal addresses. The governor spoke for the public utilities bill.

Women Work in Rain.

Fergus Falls.—Fergus Falls had a big day Saturday to make room for St. Luke's and the George R. Wright Memorial hospitals. Rain fell, but the women worked unceasingly and about $600 was raised.

Couple Have Lucky Escape.

Little Falls.—Mr. and Mrs. Fred Kuhl of Swanzilla had a narrow escape from injury when their machine was struck and thrown from the track on a crossing in this city by a freight train.

TOBACCO USERS MAY PAY

Plan to Build Roads by a New Duty to Be Imposed on the Weed.

Rochester.—The building of 10,000 miles of federal road at the expense of the tobacco users of this country is the plan of the National Highway association, which is being presented to Rochester by D. F. Bethel, organizer for the association, who is meeting with good success in securing members.

In addressing a meeting of the Commercial club, Mr. Bethel declared that the program of the association was the only feasible solution of the construction of federal highways. At the last session of congress, he said, six-ty-three bills had been presented from different sections, all favoring sectional interests for the construction of the highways, but all met with failure.

The National Highway association proposes to ask congress to pass a bill for the creation of a fund of $500,000,000, $50,000,000 of which is to be spent each year upon the building of 10,000 miles of road, which will touch every congressional district in the country. The association proposes to raise the fund by tobacco to raise the amount.

REFUGE FOR LEPER NURSE

Told That Minnesota Does not Quarantine for the Dread Disease.

Chicago, Oct. 28.—From Minneapolis, there came the first real ray of light in the gloomy life of Miss Mabel Staples, who has been a contraband driven from one position to another, from Chicago homes and refuges, because she once nursed as a nurse to a leper colony.

Despite the fact that she has been given a clean bill of health by boards of physicians, despite the appeal upon appeal with horror and shunned her as some pariah, some foreign leper colony in South Dakota and Wisconsin. Illinois hunters seem to be partial to Minnesota as more than fifty residents of Chicago have been supplied with permits to shoot in Minnesota during the present season.

The records of the commission show that licenses were issued this year to citizens of Michigan, Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, Arkansas, Pennsylvania, Indiana, Ohio, New York, Massachusetts, New Jersey, Maryland, Alabama, West Virginia, Kentucky and Montana in addition to the states previously mentioned.

Five Here From Florida.

Five Florida, long represented as an ideal country for hunting, five sportsmen have come. Among them are Rev. E. E. Mr. Rider is of the opinion that the revenue collected is only a small advantage compared with the economic benefits derived by the state from the influx of hunters.

BROTHERS KILLED; 3RD HURT

Three Tossed in Us Air When Motor Handcar and Train Collide.

Pipestone.—Two men were killed and a third was injured when a motor handcar, on which they were riding, was struck by a train on the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific railroad 7½ miles west of here. The killed were Tyler and Lake Beeton.

Edward Bradtke and his brother, Otto, lost their lives and Fred Albrecht, their companion, was injured in jumping from the car when the train struck it. All of the men were employed on the railroad.

The Bradtkes were killed instantly, being thrown some distance from the track with the wrecked car.

Will Hold Sessions There July 4-11, So the Committee Decides.

Ann Arbor, Mich., Oct. 24. — The next convention of the National Educational association was made by the executive committee, which met here to choose a convention city.

Rat Poison Proves Fatal.

St. Cloud.—Mrs. Fred Gies, aged forty-three, living south of here, is dead and her husband is seriously ill as a result of eating two cakes, which were baked by a woman who spread with about 200 grains of arsenic. The bread had been prepared for the purpose of poisoning rats, which were infesting the residence. By a new corner of the home, unbeknown to the Gies family. The young girl found the bread wrapped in a paper on the woodpile, and gave it to her mother, believing that the new bread had been left there by a neighbor.

Seeks St. Paul Chief's Removal.

St. Paul.—The removal of Chief of Police Flanagan of St. Paul and several detectives, alleged to have been in charge of certain parts of the Twin City Reporter, is contained in a petition presented at a mass meeting of citizens in the old capitol. Chief Flanagan is now the subject of an investigation by the police commission. About 500 people attended the meeting. Guilford Dudley and others, including Father James Donohue, spoke.

Man Fails Five Stories.

Wabasha. — The lifeless body of Frank Young, head miller of the Big Joe flouring mill of this city, was discovered on the cement pavement in front of the mill. An elevator used by the fifth floor told the story, but just how he came to be hurled to his death will probably never be known. He was subject to sudden and the coroner's jury is of the opinion that he ran to the window for fresh air and lost his balance. His skull was crushed, both legs and one arm broken, and his body mangled.

Found Dead in Barn.

Clinton.—Martin Lillehagen, a young farmer living with his father west of here, was found dead in the hayloft of the barn. He returned home at a late hour and in place of eating into the house went to the barn.

Ore Movement Under Handicap.

Two Harbors.—With temperatures ranging from 20 above to zero on the iron range, the ore business was brought to almost a standstill last week for the reason that the ore freeze in the cars.

TOWN WILL HIRE AN EXPERT

Morris to Try Novel Scheme of Government—Election Will Be Held Soon.

Morris.—After the first of January, Morris is going to be "run," or managed, by a town expert, by a man whose specialty is town management, who has been trained by education and experience for just such work.

This is to follow as the result of a change in the plan of government adopted at a recent election. Morris is going under a commission form of government, in other words.

The commission is to consist of three men, one of whom will have the title of mayor. These three men will be responsible for the government of the city.

But the real control of the city, the executive management will be in the hands of a trained expert. This man is not necessarily to be a resident of the city. He may come from anywhere to this or another county. The only requirement to be made of him is that he shall know his business, and know how to put his knowledge into successful practice. It is to this that Morris is making a wide departure from commission forms in other cities.

While the mayor will appoint the chief of police, the letter will have to look to the expert for guidance when he is dealing with matters which give him doubt.

The schools, however, do not come under the supervision of the commission. They will be managed as before by a separate board.

The commission, under the new plan, will be elected on the traditional election day in November. While under the new charter there may be any number of tickets in the field, a certain percentage of the voters being the only requirement for committing a ticket, this fall there is only one ticket in.

The ticket consists of E. J. Jones, for mayor, and J. R. Kreuger and N. Vloge for commissioners.

DULUTH BOY SMOKERS HAPPY

Asbestos Pocket Brings Cheer to Schoolboy Who Would Disregard Rules.

Duluth.—Central high school students affected by a recent drastic smoke ordinance adopted by the board of education are happy and the forces of fun and stealth characteristic of their acts since the new rule was put into effect are rapidly disappearing.

A recent article is a magnificent coating of the invention of an asbestos pocket where lighted cigarettes and cigars may be placed without danger, particularly for their change of attitude, it is said.

According to the new invention a pocket in a vest can be converted into one of the fireproof spaces without any outward change being noticed. It is further asserted that "hats" will hold fire several hours when placed in the new pocket.

MANKATO SEEKS UNION DEPOT

Mankato.—Officials of the four railroads entering Mankato were guests of the Commercial club at luncheon last week. The afternoon was devoted to a conference between three committees of the club and the city council and a few leading shippers and the officials, in regard to remodeling the railroad yards in order to secure that switching over Main street will be done away with, and the passenger facilities will be increased as well as railway tracks.

It is the desire of the city that a union station be built, or, if this cannot be done, that the joint tracks and North-Western station be located in a more accessible place. The proposed improvement would involve the expenditure of a large sum, and some concessions by the city and the railroads to each other.

Council Considers Union Station.

Minneapolis.—The erection of a new union passenger station in Minneapolis by the city, all railroads entering the city being required to use it, is contemplated in a resolution offered by the city council by Alderman Karl G. Lathrop, president of that body. The resolution provides that the council proceed immediately to condemnation proceedings by the state legislature, to secure in the name of the city, by gift, condemnation or otherwise, such real necessary or convenient, and erect and maintain a union passenger railway station. All railways entering Minneapolis and using the station would be required to pay rental in proportion to accommodations, sufficient to yield 6 per cent on the cost of the property and 3 per cent for a sinking fund.

Jurors Summoned By Mail.

Faribault.—The sheriff of Rice county has for the first time summoned the grand and petit jurors for the district by registered mail. This was done under the new law. The cost just to be came to be buried in his death will probably never be known. The notice was sent to each man and the conjecture is that he ran to the window for fresh air and lost his balance. His skull was crushed, both legs and one arm broken, and his body mangled.

Brakeman Dies of Injuries.

Luverne, Minn., Oct. 24.—Lloyd Ray a brakeman on the Rock Island road, died here as the result of injuries received Tuesday night near Steen-worth, while switching.

Luverne.—Farmers of Rock county are preparing to compete at Treat's annual corn contest. In addition to the prizes offered by Treat the Fire-National bank will give a hundred-dollar silver cup to the successful contestant.

Figured Satin Makes Rich Coat

GRACEFUL civilopina coats of figured and brocaded fabrics, especially those of satin, are luxurious beyond all other garments except those of rich fur. In these figured satin coats the design breaks up and enhances the sheen of surfaces. Their high luster forms a pleasure for color and light and the three dance together upon them.

If one is looking for the luxurious, it is to be found in these garments. In the new, and what are termed the "fancy," colors these coats are only suited to high occasions. Oftener they are developed in gray, or taupe, or in some rich brown shade and are more generally useful. Perhaps gray is the happiest choice of color, for them; it is at home everywhere and has a charm and say-by comparison quiet. The figured satin coat does not go out of style, however. It is a showy garment.

Linings are a contrasting colors, but they must be chosen carefully. Nothing conspicuous will do for them. For trimming, fur and marabout come into use. Both these, the season, are dyed into all sorts of colors. They are, after all, best in natural colors and in black and white.

PRETTY TURBAN SUITABLE FOR YOUTHFUL FACE

DESIGNED for the daughter in mourning, or for other youthful faces, this simple turban is a splendid example of finesse in millinery.

Mourning adds that air, all special veiling having a fine hair dust surface—make the band about the head. It is laid in a triple fold over a support of buckramette. The hair is drawn up in a similar fold at the one-half length. First a supporting crown of cylindrics is shaped and covered by the fabric used. Then the band is cut, cut and shaped to follow the cylindrics, exactly.

On the foundation band of buckramette are arranged the folds as they are placed. Over this at its upper edge is a bias fold of crape is stretched. At the under edge a similar fold of crape is placed and over this the triple fold of mourning silk.

The smart crown of crape has finally to be placed. It is a little higher than the supporting crown of cylindrics and is indented about the outer edge. The crape must be tacked to the buckramlation with invisible stitches, as otherwise it will not stay in place. The crown is made of a separate piece of with the raw edge turned under and tacked into a narrow box.

The extra fulness of crape is laid in irregular folds at any place on the band where it becomes necessary to dispose of it. This depends upon the shape of the crown. It will be seen that the crape is almost plain across the front, but has considerable fulness at the right side and apparently less at the left.

The crape flies almost plain across the back of the shape also. The hemmed edge is tacked to the upper edge of the band with its fulness disposed of in the way and the finishes the just another the small flat bow.

GROWING CROP OF CELERY ON SMALL FARM

Boards Set Up Beside the Rows of Celery During the Blanching Period.

(By ANNA GALLAGHER.)

As a rule, late celery makes more growth during the fall months, after the weather gets cool, than at any other time. In hot, dry weather celery needs a great deal of attention, for unless the roots of the plant can be kept cool and moist there will be no growth to speak of.

For this reason as well as several others, I prefer to bank the row in with earth as the plants grow. When blanching by this method is out of question, I mulch them with well rotted manure out of the poultry house, and then set broad boards on edge several inches from the plants in either side of the row and fill the space around the plants with hay or dry leaves.

I like to draw the earth up to the plants as they grow, because in this way one will have far more white stalks than when the work of banking is done all at once.

Some people suppose that no matter how much celery they set out the time of blanching process begins will remain the same, whether it is small or large. But such is not the case.

Celery must have air to keep it from getting, therefore the tips of the branches which form the heart are injured over with earth. Anything that is dry and is easily removed, will help to keep out the frost, but dry leaves

EASTERN EYES ON ALFALFA PLANT

Crop Will Do More to Restore Worn Out Farms Than Anything Yet Suggested.

A carload of alfalfa seed shipped from Oklahoma to the farmers of the New England states opened the eyes of able to sell some better she ought by a stroke to find out just what sort of butter people want in the market place for, and how the same is packed—and then comply with those conditions. If they do so they will get all the trade.

On a Saturday not long since I was waiting to the store, several persons were standing about. One of these, a man of that from two customers (myself and one other) he took from a round prints and wrapped in oil paper. Upon a part the large rolls were also wrapped in oil paper.

The clerk weighed a basket of eggs and put them in a box. Then he looked at the prints and said to me:

"What I sell and sold to my wife."

I tasted the butter. It was good with the merchant would have been glad to pay 35 and 40 to sell it.

I asked the butter. It was good with the merchant would have been glad to pay 35 and 40 to sell it.

The lesson of the Sulzer impeachment is that it is better to reform before becoming a Tammany Boulevardier.

It costs $3,000,000 a week to run New York city. It isn't worth it, but the Gotham "ghost must walk" every Saturday night.

Everybody is for efficiency and economy now, as the Duluth Herald's platform can be approved, if that is what the Herald means.

Of course, the trouble is too many people covet Horatio's job and if they were on the job would be doing just about as he is doing.

It President Hearst could only "restore peace" there could be no doubt of his ability to get through the kind of tariff bill he wants.

The Sauk Centre Herald printing plant has been improved by the addition of an intertype typesetting machine, the "nine word" in machinery of its class.

It is crossing the Andes in an automobile. What make, please?—Minneapolis Journal.

Don't be impatient. The press agents will tell us all about that very soon.

Perhaps reading the coach may win the football championship for Dr. Williams and his Minnesota warriors. From the way those fellows tore up Wisconsin last Saturday one might conclude that they intended to "show 'em".

There is one state official who, without any rate or feathers, attends strictly to the duties of his office and wastes no time in scheming to climb higher on the political ladder. His name is Lyndon A. Smith, the efficient and gentlemanly attorney general of the state.—Princeton Union.

No doubt of it. The attorney general is practicing efficiency and economy.

COADJUTORS' REMARKS.

Crosby Crucible: Other states are reported to be below the 10-year record with their crops, while Minnesota is said to be headed in nearly every line. How, when, where and why can you beat Minnesota when it comes to being a diversified, reliable state? It can't be did.

Sandstone Courier: A doctor, who has been traveling much through the state, says that Minnesota looks like an oasis in the desert. That is a good advertisement, and the number of land seekers already flocking in indicates that people in other states have heard something about this oasis.

Little Falls Herald: Congressman Lindbergh's references to the currency bill are no doubt based on facts. It is far from an ideal measure, but it seems to be about all that can get through. If any change is desired from the present chaotic situation, the administration bill will have to go through.

Two Harbors Journal: Crooked trees will now be tolerated in good and straight men will see that which is straight. To the credit of our modern civilization let it be said that in business, in domestic life, in politics, in religion, the straight men outnumber the crooked and their number is rapidly increasing because the world is steadily growing better.

Worthington Globe: One of the best barometers of business is the "Want Column" of the daily newspaper. Pick up the Sunday edition of any of the city dailies and scan the classified columns with a view to securing help of any kind. The ratio of "Help Wanted" to "Situation Wanted" advertisements is something like 20 or 30 to one. Or if that doesn't suit you, just go out and try to find a carpenter to do a job for you. Who says the country is not prosperous?

Aurora News: One good way to consolidate in the administration of the state government would be to weed out those game wardens who draw pay for the political prestige they have, increase the pay of little for those who are performing actual service, and then inject a dose of ginger into the whole bunch and insist on results. A few good men who were in earnest could break up the lawless hunting and fishing that is large territory in a short while, if the state commission so decided.

Editor Rudolph Lee of the Long Prairie Leader is justly peeved because the Duluth Herald has just discovered that the issue in state politics should be economy in state government. Mr. Lee points out the indictable fact that this was the chief issue advanced by his father, William E. Lee, in the last campaign but the Duluth Herald failed to make good at that time. However, we can welcome the assistance of the Herald, late though it may be.—Watkins Pioneer Journal.

What Stunted Emerson.

Emerson's period of literary production might have been considerably longer had he followed the light of a vegetarian advocated by the Lancet. In one of Mr. H. J. Warner' letters to his wife he writes: "We are all living on a diet of seed cheering cupe—but no pie for breakfast. It was pie at breakfast that broke Jack Emerson's memory but his mind—or memory—at a much earlier period than he would have been if he had been living in the vicious habit of pie at breakfast."—London Chronicle.

MARIA'S MONEY

She Drew Too Much on Her Imagination

By CLARISSA MACKIE

Maria Bevis dusted the glass showcase in her little store, piled the bolts of percale and gingham neatly on the shelves behind the counter, put the calendars in the window and unlocked the door for the day's business.

Behind the store, which was the front parlor of her house, were the kitchen where Maria lived.

As she sat at the window waiting for customers she saw a girlish form hurry past and enter the grocery store, Maria Bevis smiled sorely.

Presently she scattered, snatching irritably at the red yarn of her ball. "If Jane isn't just like Amy Lane. Probably just got out of bed and came to the store for something for breakfast. I never could believe Cousin Sam's daughter could be so different from me. Amy Lane always kept thrifty and hardworking. Somehow Amy Bevis was different; then she went and married Andrew Lane, and everybody knows it's starvation business running a country newspaper. But"—

Her door swung inward with jangling bell, and a little, black eyed white haired woman bopped in like a sparrow and perched on a chair.

"Well, Maria, how goes it?" twittered Ida Bennett girlishly.

"I'm all right, Ida," returned Maria tartly. "Couldn't get to sew today?"

"Yes—up to Mrs. Brenner's. I'll want two yards of plain colored alumin and two spools of black thread No 60, I guess. Just saw Amy," rosaried Ida.

"So did I."

"Amy looks sick, Maria."

"Probably she eats too much pastry. I hear she lives out of the bakery," sniffed Maria, squinting nearsightedly into a box of thread.

"They are having a hard time to get along," murmured Ida kindly.

"Humph! Howard better go to work and do something that will bring in real money. I never dreamed when I lent that money to Amy's father that he would die without a penny. Wish I spoke to her about it she and Howard up and promised to pay every cent, with interest."

"I hope they said they would pay compound interest."

Maria flushed. "You do hear a lot of trashy talk, Ida! Howard did say that, but it's all talk. They've never made but the one payment on the interest. I never expect to get the rest."

"I expect it's a good deal for you to lose," suggested Ida inquisitively.

"That's a personal matter," returned Maria stiffly. "Here enough, Ida! I bet it to Cousin Sammy, and he gave me the note for it payable on demand. Amy and Howard have promised to pay it. But, land, I've given it up!"

"Folks say you don't speak to Amy and Howard now," ventured Ida Bennett as she arose to go.

"For sure folks are right. I told 'em I didn't hold to keeping acquaintance with cheats."

"Maria!" For once Ida's sharp voice was scarcely sympathetic for young Howard Lane and his wife. Amy. Maria, as she changed the topic. "Mr. Busby told me to tell you that you was appointed one of the delegates to the convention at Ripple River. There'll be twenty-five churches represented. Mrs. Brenner's another. I suppose you'll go?"

"No, nowhere!" cried Maria bitterly. "I can't afford to. Ida. If Amy would pay me that money I could go."

"Well, I'm sorry, goodby," and Ida tripped daintily out the jangled after her. "My," she breathed as she skipped down the street. "Maria must have been hit a lot of money! When I think of all the things she's wanted to do and couldn't because of the money tied up in that family foin I feel's if she was a martyr."

Ida Bennett repeated that remark the next afternoon at the sewing society, and at a circle of admirers gathered around the group of busy women.

"It must be thousands of dollars," observed Mrs. Brenner quietly, "although I never could understand how Maria Bevis could get hold of very much to lend. I remember, when I went into store for Mr. Brenner, I offered to get her my new parasol silk, but Maria said she couldn't afford it just then; she'd lent every penny to Sammy's folks and they hadn't paid her back."

"No end of her to talk so much about it," said the minister's wife. "Family affairs are best kept in the family."

"That's what I'm always telling Merle," chirruped Ida Bennett, sewing jerkily. "But she will gabble about it. Does seem's if her milk of human kindness was turned to vinegar and she just rejoiced in getting slaps at Howard and Amy."

"I wonder how the baby is?" murmured Mrs. Busby, the minister's wife.

"Better, so Amy said when I ran in there yesterday. Seems they had trouble with the milk from Lonely Howard wants to buy a cow, but I guess he doesn't dare to until they pay Maria."

"Howard's arm was around Amy's waist. "Dear, if you hadn't married me you might have been over there enjoying yourself," he said, a little tenderly. "Now you are ashamed to go because you haven't got decent shoes to wear and because if you spent a penny Cousin Maria would frown and call us"—

"Cheats," finished Amy, with a little laugh. Never mind, Howard. I've been to lots of fairs, and I've got you and baby, and that's enough for any girl. Only I do wish we could pay Cousin Maria's note."

They started to go into the house when a man entered the front gate and came briskly toward them. "Mr. and Mrs. Howard Lane?" he asked abruptly.

"Yes," said Howard.

"I'm Tobias Beth—Maria's brother, Guess you've heard of me from your father, Amy, sin't it? You was a little girl when I went away. Your father, my Cousin Sammy, mortgaged his house for $1,000 to send me to California to get back my health. Well, I got it back and went to Australia, and I've been making money. I've brought back Cousin Sammy's note to Maria and interest. He's here in this packet. I'm sorry I couldn't give it to him direct. He was one of the best men in the world. The man's voice trembled as he falsified speaking.

Without questioning why this long delayed loan was only now being repaid, Howard and Amy watched Tobias Bevis into the house and listened to his story.

"I came here first. Maria wasn't home, and I went to the minister, Mr. Busby, and he gave me the particulars of Cousin Sammy's death. I'm sorry, Amy, that your father lost his home on account of me, but I'll make it up. If I can, in the little gift of years. Did you say her name was Joyce?"

He played with the baby while Amy and Howard counted the money with trembling fingers and unbelieving eyes. Twenty-two hundred dollars! What wealth! Perhaps there would be enough left after Cousin Maria's awful debt was paid to give them a fair start in the world. Paying the interest had always kept them back.

"We must go tonight," whispered Amy, and Howard nodded assent.

Tobias promised to care for the baby until their return, and the happy pair hastened to Maria's house, where they found their aunt in a state of perturbation over the discovery of a burglar's leather suit case on her front piazza.

"What in time has happened?" she asked tartly as she ushered them into her sitting room.

"We've come to pay the note," said Amy proudly. "Will you please bring it at once, Cousin Maria? We must get it off our minds."

"With compound interest," added Howard.

Maria looked at them blankly. She had never expected the note to be paid, and she indorsed locket at it for years. Slowly she walked to the china closet and took down a large blue china teapot. She thrust her hand in the top and drew out a bundle of yellowed papers.

Her spectacled eyes selected one and brought it to the table and laid it on the top of the others. "Here it is," she said skeptically.

"Do you want to pay the whole of it?"

"I hope it isn't over $2,000," whispered Amy prayerfully as she turned over the note.

She stared uncomprehendingly at it and gave it to her husband. "What does it say?" she whispered tensely.

Howard read and his face flushed.

"Cousin Maria, do you mean to say that this note is only for $25—that that old skin flinter Beth borrowed from you?" he demanded hotly.

Maria nodded, dazedly. "I guess that's right," she said sheepishly. "Somehow I got to thinking how many things I could do that money. It got to seem like a whole lot. I—I"—She paused helplessly, while Howard counted out $50 and pushed it across the table. Then he ranged all the note and set a lighted match to it.

"Maria!" For once Ida's sharp voice was scarcely sympathetic for young Howard Lane and his wife. Amy. Maria, as she changed the topic. "Mr. Busby told me to tell you that you was appointed one of the delegates to the convention at Ripple River. There'll be twenty-five churches represented. Mrs. Brenner's another. Maria stretched out her hands across the blazing fragments on the red cloth into Maria's scared eyes.

"Why, Howard," she said gravely, "you've spoiled the three years of our married life with that money. It's your sum. It is paid in full. How are you going to pay us back for the agony you have caused us? Are you going to put us the lunchingsock of the village band?"

"Don't Howard," said Amy softly. "Please don't, dear. I'm sorry."

"What would liquidate say if it knew how much we really owed you?" Howard added contritely.

The Local Field

Band concert Monday night.

Mrs. J. A. Duffy entertained the "Happy Hour" club Wednesday afternoon.

Felix Boucher of Gluot was attending to business matters in town yesterday.

High cut skating shoes for girls, solid gun metal, solid counters, $3.00 also a sandy at $2.50.—LaBissonierre. —Adv.

Miss Flaye, daughter of Lars Flaye, returned this week from Langberton, where she had been visiting with relatives.

Miss Agnes Bjorn, who has been employed in P. H. Gunns' office during the season, has returned to her home in Crookston.

Mr. and Mrs. Albert Turk of Woodworth, N. Dak., brother-in-law and sister of P. L. Purringhaus, are guests this week at the Purringhaus home.

Have handled Gridman shoes for 15 years and never had a real "kick." The stuff is in them. Misses $1.35 to $1.75; ladies 1.25 to 2.00; boys 1.50 to 2.25.—LaBissonierre —Adv

Miss Maxine Linquest entertained a number of her girl friends at a Hallowe'en party Saturday evening. Ten girls were present and enjoyed a pleasant evening at cards.

The infant son of Mr. and Mrs. C. O. Kankel, born last Thursday, passed away Tuesday night. The obsequies were taken to Fertile, Mr. Kankel's old home, for interment.

Harry B. Healy, who has been in the employ of a telephone company at Missoula, Montana, for several years, has become a newspaper man. He is now in charge of the circulation department of a Missoula daily newspaper.

Bulk apples $1.25 while they last. Get your winter's supply, they will keep. Also fancy cultivated Blue Helens, Sugar, $4.85 cwt.—LaBissonierre.—Adv.

The ladies aid society of the Presbyterian church will serve a New England supper at the church parlors next Wednesday, Nov. 12, the charge for which will be 25 cents. Supper will be served from 5 o'clock until all are served. All are invited.

The warm weather of the past few days has drawn the frost from the ground and the farmers are busy plowing again. Weather conditions this fall have been almost perfect and it is probable that farm work is farther along than ever before at this season of the year.

A moving picture show "Supt. C. H. Workman of the public schools Tuesday evening was so obliged to event. The girls of the normal department and their instructor, Miss Watson, were the grandstands and Mrs. Workman was an accessory before the fact. Mr. Workman was very much "s'prised" and the young people spent a delightful evening.

Mrs. Emil Albrechtson of Grand Forks, who is visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Hanson, was the honor guest at an F. & P. D. affair given at the home of Mrs. E. G. Jones Tuesday evening. Mrs. Albrechtson was for several years a member of the F. & P. D. and her friends took advantage of her presence in the city to shower her with a dozen sterling silver spoons.

Mrs. Kellogg is possessed of unusual ability as a reader, and delivers the selections with charming grace and dignity. She chooses her audiences with cuttings from the works of Nesbit, Tompus and Trowbridge. Nothing could be more imagined than her rendition of "Little Boy Blue," by Eugene Field.—Buffalo Courier, Lotus Theatre, Friday evening, Nov. 14.

The girls who are doing the work of the normal department of the public schools visited a number of rural schools of the vicinity Wednesday. The observing of work being actually done is a part of the practical instruction they are receiving.

Rev. Fr. Ambrose has been quite ill recently, necessitating that another priest be here to look after the work of St. Mary's parish and Rev. work of St. Marys' parish and Rev. Fr. Ambrose's parish. Rev. Fr. Ambrose spent several days here. Fr. Ambrose's condition is improved.

New Red Lake county farmers are Anton Zins, brother of A. W. Zins and Jos. Zins of this city, and his son-in-law, who came last week with three families from Iowa, this week have purchased the J. F. Bagan farm and the J. A. Nicholson farm, five properties just west of town, and are now in possession of the places. Both men are prosperous southern Minnesota farmers. They are desirable citizens and will no doubt make their fine Red Lake county farms pay. Mr. Zins is a newspaper man, though.

H. C. Cyr, the former Brooks man, now a resident of Alberta, Canada, was in the city Wednesday and will remain here until after New Years. Mrs. Cyr and the younger children have been here several weeks. Mr. Cyr and the older boys went to Canada and they will remain here until spring as that the children may be in school. Mr. Cyr left his two sons, Joseph and Nap, in charge of their Tamarack ranch. Mr. Cyr says that while the small grain crop is rather light, they got enough to feed cattle and find that they are getting along nicely.

The state law now requires that all hotels shall be licensed. This item is published because it has been noted that the inspector has "pulled" some of the hotel owners who might think any thing that the Gazette has given them a "lick."

Mayor I. Lemieux, who was in attendance at the meeting of the Minnesota Educational association, said it was a very interesting experience. There were many learned men at the meetings, but they were mostly "theorem bystanders", who had the privilege of seeing the women running things to suit themselves. In fact, the women seemed to be running the town, for to the same city and in the same block was a big suffrage meeting and the hotels and the hotel lobbies were thronged with women. So fact, you couldn't escape having the feather in your eye most of the time.

W. H. Krueger is at Rochester for treatment by the Drs. Mayo. Mr. Krueger has suffered for years from what was supposed to be rheumatism. Recently he has been almost convinced that his trouble is due to an injury he received several years ago and he decided to go to Rochester for hospital treatment and give the famous surgeons a chance to fix him up. Mr. Krueger has written to friends here that he has been the "victim" of X-Ray examination several times during the week, that he has been in the hospital. Though they have not definitely determined what the trouble may be, Mr. Krueger says he is gaining strength under the hospital treatment.

WOMAN NOT INSANE

Woman Acted Violently Because of Attempt at Self-Destruction.

Sheriff Fellman was summoned to Plummer last night to take into custody Mary Jacot, a woman employed at Hotel Plummer and supposed to be insane. The sheriff and S. J. Rice, the proprietor of the hotel, overpowered the woman, who was acting rather violently, to Red Lake Falls. The woman when questioned, refused to say much, but finally said she had taken something to end her life and that accounted for her violent conduct. Physicians expressed the opinion that the woman is sick and not insane and consequently an examination to make sure to decide as to her sanity would not be proper. The woman has recovered enough from the effects of the drug she had taken so that she was able to return to Plummer with Mr. Rice.

ANOTHER RAILROAD RUMOR --N. P. DEPOT UP TOWN

There have been so many rumors regarding improvement in the service of the Northern Pacific railway, that one must surely be convinced that some improvements are to be made—and yet all except the railroad officials must guess at what the improvements are to be.

First, we were advised—several weeks ago—that the Northern Pacific line through town would be changed to make possible the construction of a depot close to the business section and that the train service would be improved.

A little later it was reported that the Northern Pacific had purchased the Great Northern line from the Junction to Warrond and that the new arrangement would put Red Lake Falls on a main line of the Northern Pacific, passing a Soo-City-Winnipeg line.

Now comes a report that adds credence to the first report. The Gazette has been told that railroad men have been in town this week looking over the ground, in fact, according to the report—and that theirs was said to do with the plan to change the Northern Pacific line through the city, the construction of an up-town depot and other improvements in the service.

JAILER BECAME JAILED

Thief River Falls Prisoner Locks Custodian in Cell—Make's Good His Escape.

Thief River Falls, Minn., Nov. 4.—Paul Medderleigh, custodian of the local jail, underwent the sensation of being held a prisoner in the jail over which he has charge Thursday evening while, his prisoner made good his escape.

Three prisoners were in the jail at the time, one of them was H. O. Hanson, who elected to be a resident of Minneapolis, and who was serving a 10-day sentence for jumping a board bill.

Jailor Medderleigh had just entered the cell block with the prisoner's supply. After unlocking the main door he placed the key back on the wall to the corridor. While his back was turned Hanson tiptoed past him and slammed the heavy steel door to the cage shut, at the same time springing the lock on the massive padlock. Medderleigh rushed frantically to the door, but arrived too late. The outer door to the building was also unlocked and Hanson made his escape.

The escape was effected during the supper hour and at a time when there were but few persons in the jail. Nearly 15 minutes elapsed before cries of the imprisoned officials were heard and he was released. No trace of Hanson can be found.

LOS ANGELES TO HAVE FINE ROADS

Los Angeles county, Cal., is determined to have the very best roads in the United States, according to F. H. Joyner, chief engineer of the good roads commission of that county. Wonderful progress has recently been made there, and the work is being continued on an enlarged scale.

In 1910 the road commissioner of Los Angeles county was revised, an entirely new staff of officers being placed in control. From the moment that the new men entered upon their duties they immediately began the task of improving the roads, which were in a deplorable condition. Now, after two years and a half of hard work, the roads of Los Angeles county are without doubt the equal of any roads in the United States, said, quoting Mr. Joyner, "it will not be many years before they will far outstrip those of any other rural system of any county in America.

"One of the greatest reasons why the roads of southern California can be brought up to and maintained in such excellent condition," continued Mr. Joyner, "is that the climate there, unlike that of the north, particularly in the northwest, where one half of the year is extremely cold and the other half wet, is fairly even throughout the entire year. These extreme changes of temperature have, of course, a good effect in the spring, when the frost is coming out of the ground, and a road well made also spring is often nothing around the west by the frost.

"For these reasons quite often as much money is sufficient to keep the road in repair each year as was the initial cost, while in southern California little more than a headlight runs the road is well made, and the money the northern counties use in repair the roads can be used to improve more roads."

Already more than 400 miles of roads have been macadamized and are being kept in first-class condition, and about twenty miles are under construction. About 200 miles have still to be constructed before the great work will be completed. All of the smaller towns lying in Los Angeles county are now connected with Los Angeles city, and now all that remains is to connect these towns with one another and the roads at intermediate points. Nearly the 400 miles of road completed, there is a matter of fifty miles that has been greatly improved, but not as yet thoroughly macadamized. This is included in the 200 miles that are yet to be completed.

The cost of the work so far has been $4,000,000. The average mile of roads has cost $10,000, although some miles have run as low as $7,000, while others have run as high as $15,000, which it was necessary to do a large amount of grading. The cost of the remaining 300 miles will average about the same $2,000,000.

THIS particular will bequeaths a prosperous sanitarium with all the accompanying property to the grandson of the testator, provided the young man, somewhat of a scapegrace, can run the place profitably for a period of sixty days. The grandson fails to show up on time and an impecunious stranger is persuaded to take his place. The plots, intrigues, the humors of the fractious patients will make you laugh from the first to the last installment.

MIKE REILEY'S FUNERAL

Showing That a Mistake May Breed Mistakes

By OSCAR COX

The incident of this story was a recent occurrence. This is mentioned beforehand because there are carping critics who would say after reading it that the plan was farfetched: that such happenings were only to be found in stories and there, in nothing probable in it.

Mike Reiley, a young mason, started out to work on a bright, morning, light hearted, for by the end of the week when paid off, he would have the $500 that he had resolved to save before marrying Nora O'Toole, the girl he loved and who loved him better than all the world. The banns had been published, and everything was being made ready for the wedding, which was to occur in just ten days from that date.

Mike said "So long" to his mother, who was a widow, and to his sister, Kathleen, who worked in a paper mill and then walked briskly along till he came to the house where Nora lived and where he expected to see her sitting in the sewing room window waiting on her wedding outfit, for Nora knew the time that Mike went to work and was always there to give and receive a smile, and sometimes they had a brief chat together.

This morning Nora threw up the sash, and Mike stopped, and Nora called him if he had attended to this and to that in preparation for the wedding or the fixing up of the nest in which they were to live. a four room house near Mike's present home. He had satisfied her that he had done the painting needed, and replaced the broken glass in the windows, and mended the roof, and they both agreed that there was nothing more to be done on the premises except what would be done after they moved in. Mike kissed his hand to her. She threw him a kiss in return, and Mike went on his way, while Nora drew down the sash and resumed her sewing.

She was very happy considering that she was to be married so soon to the man she loved and piled her needle briskly. It seemed to go through the fabric of itself.

Then suddenly a presentiment came over her that something was about to happen to her mother's son as she sat with Mike in it and a lot of memories stirring about in it, flooded her mind.

Then it seemed to her that Mike sat up in his coffin and said: "What are you sitting around that way for when you've come to a wedding? Get up and shake a leg." But Nora drove it out of her head.

About 9 o'clock that night Mike's sister, Kathleen, appeared at Nora's home and asked if she had seen anything of Mike. Not he had not come home. Nora was a bit troubled, for Mike, especially since he had been making preparations to be married, had been very regular in his homecoming after knocking off work at 5 in the afternoon. She told Kathleen that she had not seen him since he went by in the morning. when he was looking very well and very cheerful. She asked Kathleen to tell him when she returned to come and let her know of his arrival, for she would not go to bed until she had news of him.

Mike did not come home that night and in the morning her mother, his sister and his sweetheart were all very much troubled about his absence. They hoped that the postman would bring a letter from him stating that he had been called upon to do some work which would take him too far from home to warrant his coming in the evening and going out again the next morning. But the postman passed, whistling at the door of every other home on his way except that of the Reileys, not leaving them a single letter.

The day ended without any word from Mike. They would have sent to where he worked to inquire about him, but Mike had never taken pains to keep them informed as to the places where he was employed, since he was frequently changing; sometimes work lag on two or three different jobs in the same day.

A week passed, and Mike did not turn up. His mother was broken down with worry. Nora ceased her preparations for the wedding. Kathleen alone, who was obliged to go to work every day and whose mind was therefore employed, stood up under the trouble. All hope of them assuming what newspapers they could get hold of to see if a body had been found anywhere that might be Mike's.

One morning just before Kathleen went to the factory she saw her mother, who was looking in a newspaper for news of Mike, fall in a faint. Kathleen ran to her, and her first words after regaining consciousness were:

"My boy is dead!"

"Where is his mother?" asked the horror stricken girl. "Show me!"

Mrs. Reiley put her finger on the item, and Kathleen read that the day before a mine had stepped into St. Luke's hospital and had fallen unconscious. He had revived just long enough to say his name's O'Reiley."

"It isn't Mike at all, mother," said Kathleen. "There's no 'O' to our name."

At it the fact shirked to her eyes and she turned them away as one who gladly was the sight.

"It's my brother, Mike Reiley," she moaned.

She went away, stopping at Nora's to break the sad news to her. Nora was broken hearted, but bore her affliction with resignation. She went with Kathleen to Mrs. Reiley and told her that the body in the hospital was Mike's.

After awhile when they had become pacified they took steps to have the body brought to the house for the funeral. They called in friends, who took the burden upon themselves of making all the preparations. An undertaker was brought to prepare the body, and all other details were attended to.

A number of friends looked at Mike, each making some remark.

"He looks very natural," said one. "He must have died a peaceful death."

"How changed!" said another. "I'd scarcely know him."

And so the comments went on. Mrs. Reiley gazed down upon the corpse, her face blinded with tears. Nora would do the same if, saying that she preferred to remember the happy circumstances of her love as she saw it when he looked up at her while she was sitting at her window the last day he ever went to work.

When the day of the funeral came round the mother, the sister and the betrothed were given seats near the coffin, while the friends of the family took chairs behind them. There they awaited the opening of the funeral ceremony.

We left Mike on his way to his work. He was engaged in laying brick all day, and just before knocking off the boss drove up in a buggy and said to him:

"Mike, I've got a call for a chimney out in the country. The carpenter work is all done, and they can't do any more till the chimney is put in. I've agreed to send a man out tonight to go to work the first thing in the morning. I want you to go."

Mike demurred, but the boss offered him double pay, and he consented. A train was soon to run over half an hour, which was barely enough time for him to catch it. He arrived at his destination at 11 o'clock at night and found a team waiting for him that carried him to the house in the country, where there was no other house then the one being built within a considerable distance.

Mike worked, several days on the chimney. He thought he should try to get word to his family as to the reason for his absence, but he was too busy to think much about it. He had once or twice remained on a job for several days without getting home or sending word and did not expect to be longer on this one. But before he finished it he was called upon to put in the foundation while for a house ready to be built a few miles away and was offered double pay if he would do it. He thought what a beautiful bridal gift he could buy for Nora with the extra money he was earning. He would take the job and if Nora complained of his being away so long just before the wedding he would console her with the gift.

When Mike finished his work and went home, as he approached the house where his mother lived he saw horses and carriages standing before the door. Terrified, he went in, eager to know who was dead. Nora and his mother and sister and bride to be in front before a coffin. His mother gave him one look and fell in a swoon back from him. Those occupying the room seats tumbled over each other to get through the narrow door.

Kathleen alone seemed to recognize her brother.

"Mike!" she cried. "you're not dead. You can't!"

"Dead? Why should I be dead?"

"I made a mistake. Mebbe I didn't look close enough."

"What's the matter with you sis?" asked Mike.

By this time Nora had recovered her wits and flew to her lover's arms, burying her face on his breast and crying:

"Oh, Mike, ours it's a miracle! Was the newsy, the one who told you to go to the country?"

Mike did not come home that night and in the morning her mother, his sister and his sweetheart were off

SYNOPSIS.

George Anderson and wife see a report of a murder in some city, and Mrs. Anderson recognizes from the description of the wash tub inside in the scene and case of Clarissimus Gilgarra then in the Cleveland district. It is found that the beautiful Miss Millie Gilgarra is the fairest and richest heiress in the county. The body manager discovers that Miss Challoner was engaged to Oswald Ostrander, a lawyer and financier. Mrs. Challoner tells of the birth of Lloyd Brotherson, who disappeared when a child. All are now letters to Orlando Brotherson. Anderson sees Brotherson, who declares his innocence of blood in a basement room. Mrs. Anderson recognizes Orlando Brotherson as the man in the restaurant. Challoner is found alive with acorn wine he offered her Oswald. Orlando Brotherson is arrested on the charge of a misdemeanor in which new details were similar to the Challoner affair. Anderson and Brotherson are almost bullying with Brotherson. He boasts of his skill as a detective. Anderson finds his son and tackles the theory of his work. A shirt read by Brotherson will "Miss Challoner's writing is proved by Brotherson. He declares the letters were written by Oswald Ostrander, who, pressed by Brotherson, who declares his innocence of blood in a basement room. The discovery is made that Oswald is still alive. Oswald's body is found with a bullet wound. Orlando Brotherson is arrested on the charge of murder. He expects to locate Lloyd Brotherson, brother of the murdered man. Orlando Brotherson, in his curiosity with a call at the home of Edith in his definition. Sweet Water town, a peculiar but in the middle. He was a kind of horse marked "Did You Love Edith Challoner as Much as That?" Orlando Brotherson tells Challoner of seeing in a dream the face of the man who killed Oswald. Orlando is taking a daily interest in Brotherson. Brotherson, reproved by his wife with his brother. It develops that Orlando Brotherson is the brother of Lloyd Brotherson. Orlando Brotherson is the brother of his cousin by Miss Millicent. Orlando sees the murderer and in terror of his life by car, as he can not identify him. Orlando Brotherson is now employed confidentially by Orlando Brotherson as his assistant and Orlando Brotherson's friend.

Great Guns! Is rose it! They all see it! Plainly against that portico of the club which still lifted itself above the further wall, a curious moving mass pictures, suggestive, below its shape, then shoots suddenly aloft, clearing the encircling tops of the bending, twisting and tempestuous tree, straight into the heart of the gale, where for one breathless moment it whirls madly about like a thing discouraged, then in slow but triumphant obedience to its master, head held erect, guides it, steadies and mounts majestically upward till it is lost to their view in the depths of impenetrable darkness.

Orlando Brotherson has accomplished his task. He has invented a mechanism which can send an object straight up from its mooring place. As the three watchers realize this, Orlando utters a cry of triumph, and Doris throws herself into Mr. Challoner's arms. Then they all stand transfixed again, waiting for a descent which may never come.

But hark, a new sound, mingling its chatter with all the others. It is the rain. Quick, moddening, drenching it comes; enveloping them in wet in a moment. Can they hold their faces up against it?

And the wind! Surely it must toss that aerial messenger before it and fling it back to earth, a broken and despised toy.

"Orlando!" went up in a shriek. "Orlando!"

Oh, for a ray of light in those far off heavens! For a lull in the tremendous rounds shattering the heavens and shaking the earth! For the longest rage on, and they can only wait, for five minutes, ten minutes, looking, hoping, fearing, wildly, then wildly self and almost without thought of each other, till suddenly as it has come, the rain ceases and the wind, with one final rage and fierce defeat, rushes away into the west, leaving behind it a sudden silence which, to their terrified hearts, seems almost more dreadful to hear than the accumulated noises of the tempest just gone.

Orlando was in that shout of returned forces, but he is not in this stillness. They look aloft, but the heavens are void. Darkness is there its rule was. Oswald begins to sway, and Doris, remembering him now and him only, has thrown her strong young arm about him, when—what is this sound they hear high up, in the rapidly clearing vault of the heavens! A throb—a steady pound—drawing near and yet nearer—entering the circle of great branches over their heads—descending, slowly descending—till they catch sight—a flicker of lights—two lights which had no sooner been shape than the car disappeared from their sight under the ridicule wall to open to receive it.

It had survived the gale! It has reentered its haven, and that, too, without colliding with aught or causing any shock to those within, just as Orlando had promised; and the world was henceforth his! But to Orlando Brotherson!

Oswald could hardly restrain his mad joy and enthusiasm. Bounding to the door separating him from the conqueror of almost invincible forces, he pounded it with impatient fist.

"Let me in!" he cried. "You've done the trick, Orlando, you've done it, by Gorb!"

"Yes, I have satisfied myself," came back in muffled self-control from the other side of the door; and with a quick turning of the lock, Orlando stood before them.

They never forgot him as he looked at that moment. He was drenched, battered, palpitating with excitement; but the ecstasy of success was in his eyes and in the bearing of his incomparable figure.

As Oswald bounded forward, but his clutch of his hand, but his glance was for Doris.

"Yes," he went on, in tones of suppressed elation, "there's no fear in my triumph. I have done all that I set out to do. Now—"

Why did he stop and look hurriedly backward into the hangar? He had remembered Sweetwater, Sweetwater, who at that moment was stepping carefully from his seat in some remote portion of the car. The triumph was not complete. He had meant—

But there his thought stopped. Nothing of evil, nothing even of regret should mar his great hour. He was a conqueror, and it was for him now to reap the joy of conquest.

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

Night.

Three days had passed, and Orlando Brotherson was well in the world. He had not before a table laden with telegrams, letters and marked newspapers. The news of his achievement had gone abroad, and Derby was, for the moment, the center of interest of two continents.

His success was an established fact. The second trial which he had made with his car, this time with a select few town gathered together in the streets as witnesses, had proved not only the practicability of his invention, but the great advantages which it possessed for a direct flight to any given point. Already he saw fortune beckoning to him from the shops of an unconditional offer of money and the first-class source; and better still—for he was a lover of nature—the opportunity for less resource—that opportunity for the peaceful enjoyment of which comes with the recognition of one's exceptional powers.

But his task and his more. A sweeter hope, a more enduring joy had followed upon gratified ambition. Doris had smiled on him—Doris! She had met the contempt of the outside world with a smile and had given him her first engrossing token of approval. He had kissed his more cautious on his life in an instant, for there was an eagerness in this demonstration which proclaimed the relieved heart. She no longer trusted either appearances or fate, but had plighted the troth of a young girl to a man who, with all his fame and confidence of success, was not above accepting her doubts by the very force of his personality, and the shadow which had hitherto darkened their intercourse had melted quite away. She was ready to take his word, to accept Oswald's, after which the rest must follow. Love does not lag far behind an ardent admiration.

Fame! Fortune! Love! What more could a man desire? What more could this man, with his strenuous past and an unlimited capacity for an enlarged future, ask from fate then this. Yet, as he bends over his letters, lingering some, but reading none because of a line or two, he betrays now a passing elation, and hardly lifts his head when a burst of loud acclaim comes ringing up from the street, or some ardent passer-by: "Hurrah for Brotherson! He has put new town on the map!"

Why this despondency? Have those two demons seized him again? It would seem so and with new and overwhelming force. Is it that the triumph comes the hour of reckoning Orlando Brotherson in his hour of proud attainment stands naked before the world's tribunal and the judgment is dumb and the judge inexorable? There is but one witness to such struggles, but one set of the note that wants and desolation of the devastated soul, which the storm is over-past.

Orlando Brotherson has succeeded, the attack was too keen, his forces be shaken. But as the heavy minutes

"Did You Love Edith Challoner as Much as That?"

pass, he slowly regathers his strength and rises to the fight. To what end? Nevertheless, he knows, even in that moment of regained command, that the peace he had thus bought with shame and sorrow is but momentary; that the battle is on for life; that the days which to other eyes would carry the brilliance of success, would teem with work and outward satisfaction—would hold within their hidden depths a brooding uncertainty which would make the hours of the night and even of overshadow the angel face of Love.

He quailed at the prospect, theatrical though it was. The days—the long, interminable days! In his unbroken strength and the glare of the noonday sun; he forgot to take account of the nights looming in black and endless procession before him. It was from the day phantom he shrank, and not from the ghoul which works in the darkness and makes a grave of the soul while happier mortals sleep.

And the former terror seemed for a moment to be upon him. But this was but a flurry, a startling realization, even as he had freed himself for the novice from its contagion, now. To escape all further contemplation of it he would work. Those letters described attention. He should carry them to Oswald, and in their consideration find distraction for the rest of the day, to-morrow, Oswald was a good fellow. If pleasure were to be gotten from these tokens of good-will, he should have his share of it. A gleam of Oswald's old spirit in Oswald's able bright eye would go for towards throttling one of those demons these tokens he had just released from his threat; and if Doris responded too, he would defy the fate, if he did not succeed in gaining that mastery of himself which would make such hours as these episodes in a life his with interest and peace and great emotions.

Rising with a resolute air, he made a bundle of his papers and, with them in his hand, passed out of his room and down the hotel stairs.

A man stood directly in his way, or he made for the front door. It was Mr. Challoner.

Courtesy demanded some show of recognition between them, and Brotherson was opening with his usual brief bow, when a sudden impulse led him to pause and meet the other's eye, with the sarcastic remark:

"You have expressed, or no I have been informed, some surprise at my letter of mechanician. A men of varied experiences, Mr. Challoner, but one for whom I have no further use. I am therefore, you wish to call off your bloodhounds. I am not afraid of you. I hardly think he can be serviceable either of us much longer."

The older gentleman hesitated, seek-ing hard for composure, and when he answered it was not only without irony but with a certain forced respect:

"Mr. Sweetwater has just left for New York, Mr. Brotherson. He will carry with him, no doubt, the full particulars of your great success."

Orlando bowed, this time with dignified grace. Not, a flicker of remembered the calm speech of his aspect, yet when a moment later; he stepped among the shouting admirers in the street, his air and glance betrayed a bounding joy for which no self-control could entirely atone. More than that of gratified pride, a haste and a fever were in his behavior as through the people shrank a little even while they cheered, it was rather from the wild eye and the fierce expression of the sense of sportsmen which suddenly his smile than from any recognition of the man's real nature or of the terrible passions which at that moment exalted it. But had they known—could they have seen into the tempestuous heart—what a shock would have settled upon those signs of triumph; and to what terror and self-confusion would each man have shrunk from the glance he fellows into the quiet and solitude of his own room.

Brotherson himself was not without a sense of incongruity underlying all this ovation; for, as he slowly worked his way along, the brightness of his look became dimmed with a tinge of concern which in the turn gave way to an expression of extreme bewilderment, and finally unbedifying the keen glance of his eye, he fixed it upon the man before him. Had he seen Doris' beautiful figure emerge for a moment from the vine-hung porch he was approaching, bringing with it some doubt of the reception awaiting him? Possibly, for he made a stand before he reached the steps, and with a bow to the lowers back; after which he advanced with an unhurrying step, so that several minutes elapsed before he finally drew up before Mr. Scott's door and entered through the now empty porch into his brother's sitting-room.

He had meant to do so much first, but his mind had changed. If all passed well between himself and Oswald, if he found his brother responsive and wide-awake to the interests and necessities of the hour, he might first go his interview with her till he felt better prepared to meet it. For all his cowardice or simply a reasonable precaution, and delay seemed preferable to him in his present mood of discouragement, to that final casting of his die upon which hung so many and such tremendous issues. It was the first moment of rest that he had had in tumultuous life! Never, as during intermittents or agitator, had he shrunk from danger seen or unseen or from threat uttered or unuttered, as he shrank from this young girl's love, and something of the dread he had felt in the sheriff's household for his aware in the hall and so he led on to speak when his own fluttered back on him he silent, darkened his features as he entered his brother's presence.

But Oswald was sunk in a fever-revery of his own, and took no heed of the signs of depression. In the reaction following three days of great excitement, the past had reasserted itself, and all was gloom in his once generous soul. This, Orlando had-time to perceive, quick as the thought came when his brother really realized who his visitor was. The glad "Orlando!" and the forced smile did not deceive him, and his observant eye saw at his pallid face and his packet with the words:

"I have come to show you what the world says of my invention." We will soon be great men," he emphasized, as Oswald opened the letters. "Money has been offered me and—read! read!" he urged, with an unconscious dictatorialness as Oswald paused in his task. "See what the fates have prepared for us; for you shall share all my honors, as you will from this day share my work and enter into all my experiments. Cannot you entube a little bit over it? Doesn't the prospect contain any allurements for you? Would you rather stay locked up in this gilly room?"

"Yes; or—no. Don't look like that, Orlando. It was a terribly sad speech and I ask your pardon. I'm hardly ill to-day, Edith—"

Orlando frowned.

"Not that name!" he hereby intimated. "You must not bring your life with useless memories. That dream of your youth, Oswald, belongs to the past, and a great reality confronts you. When you have fully recovered from this threat; and your mood will rebel at a weakness unworthy the one of our name. Rouse yourself, Oswald. Take account of your prospects. Get over your pain and say: 'Life holds something for me yet. I have a brother who needs me if I do not need him. Together we will make ourselves invincible and wrench fame and fortune from the world.'"

But the hand he reached for did not rise in response, though Oswald started erect and looked at him with nearly correctness.

"I should have to think long and deeply," he said, "before I took upon myself such responsibility. Your brain sun broken in wind and heart, Orlando, and must remain so till God mercifully calls you. You should have poor assistant to you—a drug, rather than a help. Besides, I am not afraid as it may be, for one of your knowledge my condition and pray you to count upon me. Orlando, have you my love? I know how the locks—I know that you have. But I am not the admirer, I should respond, and re-ceive the stimulation directly to your face Oswald, and asked, with a new note in his voice:

"Did you love Edith Challoner so much at that?"

Orlando stood a moment studying his brother's face, then he turned slowly away and walked the length of the room. When he came back, he had gained the mastery of himself, and, after a pause, asked, with a new note in his voice:

"Did you love Edith Challoner so much at that?"

A gesture. Oswald's words were always vague.

Orlando's frown deepened.

"Such grief is partly understand," said he, "but there is no room for it in any another lovely face—"

"Will you not call it that, Orlando—"

"No, we'll not talk of that," sequestered the inventor, walking away from the hearth—"not a word, you there's, but one woman—and she's a sorceress!"

"Killed!" broke from his brother's lips, drawing him to a pause in spite of his impulse of weakness and terror! Can it ever forget that? Do not expect it. Orlando!"

"Then you do blame me!" Orlando turned and with a look of deep feeling. "I blame your nervousness Because she could not understand—"

Orlando stood, however, then moved towards the door. "The beautiful Doris! Oswald, you have seen her and caused him to exclaim:

"Forgive me, Orlando!" and the color cut him short with an imperative:

"Thanks for your candor! If her spirit is darkened by grief, it is not a movable shadow between you and me. Doris is my friend, and I feel that no torture must cut all allusion to the subject. I will send her to you, and you must to share my fortunes' (as he said this he approached the door), and took his papers from the other's hand on

"No hearth understanding was possible between them now.

Crossing the hall, Orlando knocked at the door of Doris' little sitting-room.

No answer, yet she was there. He knew it by a subtle sense of the nearness of a body. She was there and quite aware of his approach, and yet she did not call out she did not bid him enter. Should he make again knocking? Or should he wished from his very heart that his impulse had led him another way, even if that way had led to a closed door of the precipice—and over.

For the face he looked upon was serene, and there was no severity in him; rather a confusion of tenderness and of harrier and pain, which made him hesitate to intrude upon her grief, and yet forced a smile of greeting. If her face was quiet, so was the room, and when he felt, for a while, that it was empty, he knew that it was not.

Nothing at all had been done or affected him like it! For him there was no other woman in the past, the present or the future, and, realizing this—failing to in the faithless but her affection and her trust might be to him in those fearsome days to come, he softly opened the door and, without announcement, stepped into the presence of Doris—that he failed to respond to her welcome and the simple congratulations she felt forced to repeat. He could neither speak the commonplace, nor listen to it. That was his crucial hour. He must find support here, or yield hopelessly to the pestilence in whose whirl he was caught.

She was quite silent and faltered back a step—a move which she regretted the next instant, for he took advantage of it to enter and close behind him the door which she would never have shut of her own accord. Then he spoke, abruptly, plaintively, but in those golden tones which no woman can resist, and which no woman could render other than alluring.

"I am unhappy man, Miss Doris! I see that my prophets here is not welcome; yet am sure that it would be no ill to you, nor for I, a prophet, which your generous nature should be moved to offer me a chair, in face of the outspoken confidence of my brother Oswald. Doris, little Doris, how long have I have loved you from the moment of our first meeting. Not to many men is it given to find the heart of his soul when he does, it is for his whole life; no second selection can follow it. I know that I am premature in saying this. But you are not prepared to hear such words from me and that it might be wiser for me to withhold them. But Doris Darby soon comes and I cannot go until I know whether you will or will not grant me your heart let loud a light to my career—a light that shall make Orlando's own glass. Nobody knows. But something undoubtedly depends upon my novelist himself. Dickens had no difficulty in interesting everybody in his poor. Thackeray made the world in-dex and the rich interesting. So does Mrs. Wharton. Dear and incomparable others.

On the other hand, Jack London, Kaufman, James Oppenheim and possibly two or three others have stretched a wonderful interest to the obscure lives. The "great American novel" seldom does have one written, yet is still awaiting publication, will deal neither with the rich nor with the poor exclusively, nor with the middle class, but with all sorts and conditions of men. It will be the novel of democracy—neither aristocratic nor proletarian.

Canvassing and Suffrage.

If you should see a well dressed gentleman carrying a suit case in each hand and a lot of trousers in the other one dragging his coat-tails on the pavement and his Knobel crease bent and broken, feeling rather unpleasant. I cannot give an adequate reason for this, but somehow I do not feel pleasant when I see the conventional custom of kissing between men and women. "Kissing is to old age." Surely it is impossible for a woman to kiss a man who is dressed in the latest fashion.

This Japanese observer got into an odd predicament through other people's kissing. He was strolling about the streets of Boston, when a crowd behind him of a narrow footpath, and in the street of the way. A young man and a girl seated on a bench. Presently he noticed that the crowd came closer, and they were finally hot behind the girl's hat; I know what was done as between the two. "Oh," he stopped short and pretended to be looking at the way on the side to distribute their happy state. Now and then he turned forward and looked back, but it was already over: I was in this predicament for about half an hour (it seemed to me) before the two heads still remain in close attachment. At last I could see the end of the scene and crossed the road, taking another path.

Lafe Under Pressure.

The pod of the Arctic seas is very fine and plastic, while in the high regions of the Antarctic the bed is covered with a thick crust of the accumulation of the remains of animals that have lived in the waters, dick and slowly sank. The pressure of the ice increases about one atmosphere to every ten meters, so every additional hundred meters adds the pressure of a hundred atmospheres. Animals that are brought to the surface they lose their scales, their segments become brittle, and they are so inflated by internal distension caused by the second pressure that in many cases they burst asunder.—Harper's Weekly.

NO KISSING AMONG JAPANESE

Osculation Regarded by Natives as the Height of Bad Manners and Foolishness.

Tekio, Japan.—In a recent number of the Far East, published in Tokio, a Japanese contributor, Rohinson Ishiguro, who writes excellent English, relates some of his surprising adventures among the kissing races of the west. He describes the horror of English women of his acquaintance when he told them that he had never kissed his mother in all his life. "The first thing an English child learns is how to kiss," he says. "The first thing a Japanese child learns is how to bow."

Maiden to Whom Kiss is Unknown.

Kissing is not practiced in Japan, he told his English friends, not because the people are unacquainted, but because "it is regarded as the height of bad manners."

The kiss in Japan, it seems, is fit only to be bestowed upon young babies by their mothers. The Japanese mother is often seen to kiss the baby in her arms, and the Japanese writer says, "but when the baby leaves its mother's arms—that is when it can get along by itself and feels a sense of self-consciousness—it would not allow its mother to kiss it." He mentions the complaint of western visitors to Japan that "everybody proposes too much our natural bodies," though the natural body "is one of the most beautiful things" and the Japanese critic of kissing concludes that it should be hidden and exposed. He adds: "Our natural feelings are really stronger. Their exposure beyond a certain limit, however, is equally offensive to our sense of decency."

Much of the kissing that he observed in England disgusted this sensitive Japanese soul a little. "When I saw two [illegible] couple, with earnest faces and tottering gaits, kissing each other on the pavement in the London streets I could not help feeling rather unpleasant. I cannot give an adequate reason for this, but somehow I do not feel pleasant when I see the conventional custom of kissing between men and women." Possibly this feeling is a survival of the old age." Surely it is impossible for a western man to kiss Oriental and to shake their happy state. Now and then I turned forward and looked back, but it was already over: I was in this predicament for about half an hour (it seemed to me) before the two heads still remain in close attachment. At last I could see the end of the scene and crossed the road, taking another path.

FIND COLONY OF RATTLERS

Exhibit on an Alabama Farm That Lost Its Owner a Prospective

Gadsden, Ala.—George Duncan took Osburn McQueen out to see a tract of land, expecting to rent it to him for the coming year.

In looking over the farm they saw two large rattlers which they shot and killed, one of which had nine rattles and the other six. Then they finished the killing of those two they found that the ground was the full of these deadly reptiles and they then began the slaughter, and when they finished they had counted piled up and began to count and saw that they had killed thirty-four. Then one small fellows, having one rattle each, thought it was worth a one year old and measuring from 13 to 15 inches long.

It is needless to say that Mr. Duncan lost a renter. Mr. McQueen said one or two rattlers are bad enough, but when it came to 30 in one lot he would let the other fellow take the place.

TAKE UP THY BED AND FLOAT

A Parisian Has Discovered a Mattress and Invites While at Sea Is Ous.

Paris.—A large Paris factory is now engaged in making for thousands of mattresses which are pronounced unobtainable mattresses. An unnamed experimenter discovered that a vegetable substance which is light, supple and soft enough for use as mattresses in berths aboard a ship and at the same time unsinkable. Every passenger on the ship furnished with these mattresses—if they are what is claim of them—will have an ideal life preserver in his bed.

Several large steamship companies' are said to have decided to replace their present bedding with these new mattresses.

Marks the Man of Business

Ability to Recognize Worth, No Matter Where Met, Is One of the Characteristics of All Gifts.

"Seeing" men is an art. It amounts almost to second sight. Often, in a business way, the ability to recognize worth mysteriously and rapidly to the last cent, is the one gift that is the foundation on which to build a fortune. Many others, nor has he been favored with a larger capital or a more scientific personality. But he rises. His name is known and his face has been a magical force.

Perhaps that means recognizing, perhaps under an unpromising exterior, what a man really is or may become. It is a matter of instinct, of organization or staff. There are business men who seem to have a genius for doing this. Their success is brought about by a great measure by the efficiency of the body of men they have picked in this way. It happens many times that a captain of affairs hunts for years for a lieutenant of certain qualities. He finds him at last. In Cinderella-like garb, far down the commercial scale, a person is hundred other men who really wanted a man of just this type have passed carelessly over. They could not "see." It is no trick at all to discover the man who has extinguishable made a record, who is already a personality in trade or that. Unfortunately such a man is unfailingly costly. What he has done, moreover, in no possible guarantee as to his future exploits. Only the tried reputation as lieutenants many times prove great disappointments when they shift. The chief has the "seeing" eye. Hence the reputation is yet to be made, and thereby hangs a tale that is many-chapter.—Cromwell Childs, in Harper's Weekly.

Victim for Each Building.

The belief, illustrated in the ballad of "The Building of the Bridge," that a victim is required to insure the stability of a bridge or building survives in Greece today, J. A. Lawson says.

There is no murder now, it suffices that a living animal, a sheep or a goat or an old person, a hair, nail parings, or clothing, old shoes or a shred of hat, or stick marked with the person's head or footprint measure, and bury these beneath the foundation stone. The victim dies within a year, but the building is safe.

Even a shadow will do. Mr. Lawson was near himself dragged into by a friend in Salonika so that his shadow might not "fall across" such a fatal spot; and the mayor of Agrinian told him that his four predecessors had all died from loitering their shadows on the foundation stones laid by them.

LOST TOWN OF ST. JOHN, ILL.

LAST REMNANTS OF SITE OF LOST TOWN

WRECK MARKS NEAR SITE OF ST. JOHN, ILL.

BELOW the bluffs which skirt the shore of Fort Sheridan military reservation the waves of Lake Michigan wash over the site of a lost town, which on the winds of a few more storms shall have blown to the beach two apple trees which have but a frail footing at the embankment's edge the last reminders of a once thriving and populous place will have been swept away.

Almost seventy years ago the hamlet of St. John was founded by a man named Hettinger and a few of his followers. The site chosen was a commanding one on the bluff overlooking the lake, and one-half mile east of the point where the northwestern depot at the Village of Highwood now stands. The great clay bank with the straight sand beach which shelves away to the water's edge at its foot looks as if it were strong enough and far enough removed from the breakers to be safe against the angriest northeaster that ever blew. The men who built their houses upon the plain surmounting the embankment thought their foundations were as sure as though founded on the traditional rock. They did take the precaution, however, to limit their building operations on the east by a line drawn fifty yards from the edge of the bluff. That line has long since been buried in the sand under the waves, and with it are the houses and the shops of the early settlers.

In the year 1846 the Village of St. John was the rival of Waukegan, which was then called Little Fort. Both were prosperous and both were growing. Highwood tradition hath it that people coming through the two places from Chicago declared that St. John showed the ear marks of success and that it was destined to be a big city. Other people beside the Chicagoans thought so, too, and they flocked to the place and built substantial houses and shops. The two apple trees which alone remain of all that partained to the Village of St. John grew in the yard of Sebastian Richards, the only one that the oldest Highwood inhabitants can remember, save Frank Milch, Peter Baker and George Shepard. Richards was a shoemaker and it is said that he is still following the trade in a town in the far south. As far as is known he is the only survivor of the men who founded the Village of St. John in the year 1847 there were several stores, a blacksmith shop, a tavern and a postoffice in the Village of St. John, which then held a population of about 200 people. In that day there was a stage coach line between Chicago and Milwaukee. The tavern at St. John was a relay station for the stage. Henry Meyers, one of the members the village in its latter days, says that the tavern was noted for its table, and its liquor, and that people frequently took the whole journey from Chicago for the sole purpose of getting a good dinner and a good drink.

It was a man who intended becoming a resident of St. John that afterward founded the Village of Half Day. He had looked over the lakeside village, and then had declared that he would establish a home there that would be but half more people in it. The automobilists who every Sunday pass through Half Day on their runs to Waukegan and return may look on the half-dozen houses there assembled, and know that the man who turned his back on St. John was kept long.

When the Chicago and Milwaukee railroad was built the surveyed line ran one-half mile west of the Village of St. John. The men realized the importance of a place of which now barely a vestige remains may be had when it is known that the railroad authorities built a spur line running to the south edge of the town. Some of the practical residents of the place had discovered that an excellent quality of brick could be made from the clay which was found in a pit a short distance south of the blacksmith shop. As a matter of fact, the presence of this brickyard was one of the chief reasons that the line of the railroad was built. When Uncle Sam accepted from the Commercial Club of Chicago the land to the north of the city as a military reservation the soldiers drew hundreds of cartloads of both good brick and broken brick from the site of the old brickyard and used the material for temporary roadmaking and for the filling in of swampy spots. The forethought of the St. John people in leaving behind them specimens of their handiwork saved the United States government a great many dollars.

It is possible to trace today with no difficulty at all the embankment upon which the branch line of the railroad ran to the brickyard and to the now lost Village of St. John. Its site and outline it looks like a millitary redoubt, and it would perfectly answer the purpose of one. The embankment was leveled at its western end when stores were erected in the Village of Highwood. It starts now from a point almost directly back of the little Methodist church, and runs eastward, broken only by roads which have been dug through it.

It was less than ten years after the founding of St. John that the people awakened to a realization of the danger to their homes by the encroachment of the waves of the lake. It is true that they saw year by year that the bluff which faced the lake was gradually worn away, but the erosion was so slow that they gave little heed. One night in the winter of 1853 a storm whipped up out of the northeast. It was forty-eight hours before it had fully spent its force. Before its assaults, the bluff gave way, tons upon tons of the hard clay breaking off in great pieces and falling to the beach. When the wind ceased blowing the wave of the dwelling seemed to be the take stood at the edge of the embankment. The villagers started to move the structures inland, but another storm, coming up suddenly, forced them to stop the work, and before it could be resumed the lake, in the shape of dislodged joists and broken planks, was being tossed about by the waves.

It was about this time that the people of St. John received a visitor who was much more unwelcome than the storm. This visitor was a lawyer armed with a lot of formidable-looking papers. He went to the tavern and asked for the elders of the village he sent for. They came. The lawyer told them that their title to the land which they occupied was extremely faulty and that they must either pay again for the ground or be claimed. They became disheartened, and when another terrific storm arose, and the blacksmith's shop, and George Shepard's house went into the lake, lost all courage. They told the lawyer that the lake seemed to have a better claim to the land than either they or he had, and that it apparently was bent on enforcing that claim. Some few of the people of St. John moved away, leaving their property behind them to fall a victim of the wind and waves. Set elements spread up to the south and the west of the deserted village, and the people, during the height of winter storms, used to go to a place near the bluff and watch for some deserted dwelling standing precariously near the edge of the embankment to fall with one final crash into the water-swept sand below.

Henry Meyers, an old time hunter was a veteran of the residents near the site of the lost village. Not long after the disappearance in the lake of the last building of the Village of St. John, Meyers took a spade and walked up the lake shore until he came to the point where a large part of the site of St. John had disappeared beneath the waves. Meyers' trip was taken up at sunrise, a time when he was not likely to be interrupted in his work. He began a series of mysterious diggings just at the base of the mud cliff. He worked for two hours and then quit. He returned to his camp several times for a week, making several new excavations a foot or two in depth each time. One morning the spade struck something hard, and in a minute the Meyers had unearthed an ingot of pure copper weighing eighteen pounds. This was worth $24. In addition he found some United States copper cents and buttons of an early date and one bronze Roman coin of the period of Nero.

Meyers kept at his work for weeks, but after unearthing the Roman piece he found nothing for a long time. He was about to give up the work for good. He ventured his spade and started homeward. On the sand, glistening in the sun at the water's edge, just as he turned to go for supposedly the last time, he found two United States silver dollars minted on one side only. Here was a puzzle which even his shrewdness could not solve. The coins were silver and of full weight, and in that day silver was of greater intrinsic value to make it useless for anyone to make counterfeits out of the pure metal. Meyers searched for another week, but found no more coins. He then showed the relics to his neighbors and to some people in the city of Chicago. He said nothing about where he had discovered the treasure. Shortly afterward, however, a man offered him $100 for the secret, and though Meyers told him that the place was exceedingly wicked on the bluff offered the money, said he would take the chance, and the offer was accepted. The purchaser never found anything and gave up the labor in disgust.

It was not long before the story of the place where the coins had been picked up became generally known and the people flocked to the bluff and to the beach marking the site of the lost town. They dug, searched and prospected with all the ardor of Klondikers, but the search result was a gold piece of the value of $2.50, which a boy picked up from the wake of a receding wave. The collection of coin which Henry Meyers found is now in the possession of a man who once ran a Chicago dime museum. No one has ever been able to account for the presence of the money in the place. The theory that it was left behind by a departing resident of St. John is said to be hardly tenable, because the people of that place were not rich enough to have been careless of valuables.

There is one material which the prospector may find in abundance. If he will go to St. John before the two old apple trees tumble down the bluff. The trunks and branches of both of them are full of lead. The trees stood just at the end of the old Sixth infantry rifle butt. For three years before the building of the present post the troops that first came to Fort Sheridan pumped lead at target practice into the butt and incidentally into the apple trees at the edge. Despite the attacks of the weather and the leaden onslaught the two trees bore a burden of fruit for years as sound as the sweet as that which their branches at the time when the town of St. John was something more than a memory.

DAMM FAMILY MEET

Senior Member in New York to Rejuvenate Name.

Seeks to Rescue It From Any Blight Cast Upon It by the Newly Risen Hall Family in Pennsylvania.

New York.—After a 45-year absence, Adam Damm, Sr., a wealthy retired restaurant man of Sacramento, Cal., has returned to New York to rescue his family name from any blight cast upon it by the competitive fame of the newly risen Hall family of Pennsylvania, which is now advancing claims for superior public attention.

Forty-three years ago Adam Damm followed his brother, August Damm, to America, leaving behind him eight brothers and sisters in Bingen-on-the-Rhine, Germany, which is the home village of the Damm family. He caused a short line in New York, then went with three companions to Sacramento, where he married the daughter of a German "forty-niner," who crossed the plains in a covered wagon. Thereafter he remained quiescent, amassing a comfortable fortune in the restaurant business.

Two months ago various news services carried reports of the Hall family in Pennsylvania. Immediately Adam Damm, Sr., called a family reunion in Chicago, and with his full clipping, was there met by his nephews, Philip Straube, a hotel man who is very proud of his mother's maiden name, Damm, Sr., had planned to leave a family reunion in Chicago two years ago, but was unable at that time to come East. Now, on the last occasion, however, the uncle and nephew came on to New York to see Peter Damm, secretary and treasurer of the Fleischmann Vehicle company, and Miss Damm. Here also were Mrs. Adam Damm, Sr., declares that his family is long lived, and that he has another branch of the Damm family.

August Damm's sons, who lived at Fort Hamilton, near New York, have disappeared, but the other Damms hope to find them. Two Damm brothers also live in the central west, but their names are not known.

Adam Damm, Sr., declares that his family is long lived, and that he has Damm relatives who are from ninety to one hundred and seven years old. He is proud of the fact that the Damm family is large and that all its members are artisans, mechanics or prosperous trades people. He confidently expects that other Damm men will be found. He says he remembers very little of New York in 1870.

THINKS RATTLERS WILL PAY

Mt. Union Man Most Insights as to Their Poison—Will Also Sell Their Hides.

Huntington, W. Va.—Lawrence N. Crum, proprietor of a grocery at Mount Union, has started a rattlesnake farm, and he thinks in starting the business this winter he will realize as large a profit from his rattlers as he will from his store.

About a week ago, while on a trip to the mountains, he succeeded in capturing a dozen of the venomous reptiles, and since that time he has been keeping them in exhibition in his store window.

The number of snakes has increased to 50, and Mr. Crum has constructed a den and will raise them. The chief profit is made from the poison, which is extracted from the rattlers at intervals. He will also sell the hides.

USE SNUFF TO CATCH RABBITS

Sneezing Renders Animals Helpless and Sure Prey for Poachers' Ferrets.

Paris—Poaching by means of snuff is the latest trick employed by an organized band of rabbit-poachers in the Vosges district, who obtain large bags of rabbits which are afterwards sent to the Paris market.

It has been subsequently discovered that the poachers strew snuff at or near the entrances to a rabbit warren and then send ferrets into the holes. As each rabbit leaves the hole it emerges at the feet of the waiting poachers. So violent are its paroxysms that it falls over on the ground and falls an easy prey to the poacher.

MISSIONARIES IN OLD JAPAN

GIRL OF SEVEN CLIMBS FUJI

At One Time Woman Were Forbidden to Ascend Japan's Sacred Mountain.

Tokio.—Mount Fuji, a dead volcanic mountain nearly fifteen thousand feet high, famous around the world for its perfect cone, has been climbed this summer by a Japanese girl, seven years old, who made the trip unaided by her elders. Considering the youthfulness of the climber, this is a record.

Another ascension will be made before the summer is over, for it all goes well with him, Saburo Ota, eighty-nine years old, will accomplish his one hundredth ascension. While the snow of last summer his record was eighty-three. August saw him complete his eighty-fourth trip to the summit.

From time immemorial, Fuji, the highest mountain in Japan, has been considered a sacred peak, and until about forty years ago women were not allowed to make the ascent. Even now much religious sentiment is attached to the mountain, and scores of pilgrims from all over the country visit the little shrines on the snowclad summit, murmuring in their ascent up the long slopes "Rokkon Shojo," meaning "May we attain the same between the Hohenzollern and Guelph families.

classes of people. Including some of the "new women" of Japan, climb up the mountain. Recently a prize climbing contest was held, and a student of the Waseda university made a record ascent by reaching the summit in two hours and a half.

Prince Hirohito, crown prince of Japan, thirteen years old, often expresses his earnest desire to climb Fuji. This year he hopes to do so with Prince Yi, former crown prince of Korea, who is now studying in Japan.

Fuji is coy in summer, and rarely discloses itself to the view of visitors who try to see it from points of vantage. This is due to the prevailing mist and clouds.

MAMMOTH IS FOUND IN ICE

Finest Specimen of Its Kind That Was Ever Discovered Now in Paris Museum.

Paris.—Count Stenbock Fermore, of the island of Great Lyakersky, New Siberia, has presented to the natural history museum in Paris what is considered to be the finest specimen of a mammoth yet found.

The gift is especially interesting because the animal's flesh is said to be edible, and the scientists who are investigating his last meal at the moment of his death, countless centuries ago. That the animal was not the first that he was able to study accurately the nature of the food of the distant epoch; they have simply to examine the contents of the mammoth's stomach, which was found in an absolutely complete condition in a strata of ice. The skin, which is without a scratch, is covered with reddish hair, thick and soft to the touch as that of a big dog. To the task of digging out, the monster from his perpetual cold storage and bringing him to Paris was one of extreme difficulty. The body was cut carefully in pieces, each one labeled, and then carried 1,800 miles to a railway line on dog sledges.

The museum has come into possession also of the skeleton of an enormous dinosaurus found near Madagascar, in the west coast of Madagascar, by the famous explorer, M. Barlie. Drawings of the dimensions of this monster may be gained from the fact that a strong man can barely lift one section of its vertebrae. Although only partially discovered, the natural history experts of the museum estimate from the fragments that the animal is already have that this dinosaurian contemporary exceeds in size the diplodocus, a plaster cast of which Mr. Carnegie gave the museum. Another addition to the skeleton of rare size is a ridiculous birds known to paleontologists as aplornis, which stood 18 feet tall.

CLOTHING FOR THE PET DOG

It Often Costs More Annually Than a Mechanic Can Earn in the Same Period.

It is quite common now for the woman of fashion to spend more on her pet dog annually than a mechanic earns in the same period to keep a family on. There is a canine outfitting establishment near Piccadilly, London, where you may learn much about this special form of extravagance, and where anything from $100 to $2,500 may be spent on the purchase of some peculiar toy pet. The animal is provided with fancy overcoats which change according to fashion. Some are made of sealskin at a cost of $95, and another $5 or two may be needed for one that is trimmed with ermine. One animal has a boots made of rubber, tanned pigskin, or patent leather, costing from $3.50 to $15 a set; he is provided with the most beautiful thing in the way in an upholstered basket for the draw ing room, an expensive toilet set, and some costly conveniences for travel Quite recently an order was given at this establishment for a dog's collar studded with diamonds that amounted to $4,000.

Dirt Causes Sickness.

The mother is the real doctor of the family. This does not mean she can cure disease or should try her hand at doing so. It does mean, however, that she can very largely prevent them, which is a much easier task and has no magic about it except daily attention to the rules of cleanliness. Dr. William B. Griggs so informed the mothers at a clinic held at the Children's Homeopathic hospital at Philadelphia. It is a valuable prescription given gratis. It costs a little trouble to exhibit. It may cost much more trouble, sorrow, perplexity and expense to neglect it. As the physician says, "Cleanliness is proper cleanliness and ignorance of what is not is one of the greatest causes of sickness."

THIS particular will bequeaths a prosperous sanitarium with all the accompanying property to the grandson of the testator, provided the young man, somewhat of a scapegrace, can run the place profitably for a period of sixty days. The grandson fails to show up on time and an impecunious stranger is persuaded to take his place. The plots, intrigues, the humors of the fractious patients will make you laugh from the first to the last installment.

KRANTZ-TISCHART.

Wending of Popular Young People on Tuesday Morning.

On Tuesday morning, November 4, took places the wedding of two well known young people of the city. Miss Margaret Krantz, daughter of Mrs. Val Krantz, and Mr. John J. Tischart, son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Tischart were married at 9 o'clock in the morning. The wedding took place at St. Mary's church, Rev. Fr. Ambrose officiating. The young people were attended by Miss Nelta Tischart, a sister of the groom, and Mr. Joseph Stala. Relatives and a few friends were in attendance at the wedding.

Mr. and Mrs. Tischart have gone to housekeeping in the Krantz house on the east side. They have many friends in the city who offer best wishes on the happy occasion.

FACTS ABOUT AGRICULTURAL SCHOOL, CROOKSTON.

The school opened last week with the largest October enrollment in its history, exceeding any previous October enrollment by 50 per cent.

Additional boys can be accommodated at the school provided those boys are placed in each of the large rooms. This can be done. When the boys' dormitory is filled provision will be made to have the school bus make regular trips to Crookston carrying students to room and board in Crookston homes. More girls can also be accommodated in the girls' dormitory.

The school is doing work which appeals to the farmers especially as they learn of its work. You can render a service to prospective students if you call the school to their attention. The faculty, buildings and equipment now will permit an enrollment of about 200, provided some secure rooms in Crookston. A new dormitory will be completed by September, 1914, which will accommodate a greater number on the campus.

Tuition is free. A small enrollment fee and small charges for textbooks and textbook rental, will be required. Board, room and laundry cost $17.50 a month. Full graduates will be furnished upon application to the Superintendent, Agricultural School, Crookston.

The school is a thorough and practical training in Agriculture and in Home Economics. Besides this, it gives a general common education in business subjects, English and letter-writing and civics. Music is taught by a special teacher of voice and piano. The school band is very successful. A fine large gymnasium is of great interest and value. The advanced course prepares the young men and women for teaching. The catalog explains all this work. A copy can be had upon application. The different courses permit any ambitious boy or girl to take subjects that will be of highest value as training for work.

The rule seems to be of as much service as possible first, thru the school work and, second, thru meetings, institutes, short courses, etc., that the experiment station workers conduct wherever requested to do so. Correspondence with the superintendent will give information regarding this work. Do not hesitate to call upon them for close service.

The school is actively urging more and better stock, more and carefully selected corn; more alfalfa and clover, the use of pure bred sires, the use of pedigreed seed grain, etc. Information regarding these important topics can be secured. Persons thinking of getting better stock will profit by taking the matter up with the school as carload shipments will be arranged and experts will aid in selecting the stock. Several cars have already been shipped in this way.

In this work for Northern Minnesota the co-operation of all is earnestly desired. If you know of young men and women who would profit by taking a course at the school, see them personally. Urge them to come. Send their names and addresses to the school. If you see the need of better stock, seed corn, alfalfa, pure seed grain, etc., urge these and request the school to assist.

It Sounded Like Thunder

By F. A. MITCHEL

I met Lillis Leognun and was introduced to her at a barn dance. I fell head over heels in love with her at once. There was some attempt at fancy costume among the girls, and Lillis was dressed like an Indian girl, her long black hair hanging below her waist. I knew scarcely any one there and could watching a set, at dancing who were doing a quadrille or some other of those old fashioned square dances. Lillis was holding about, feeling happy in the consciousness of looking very pretty and showing her long locks, and all the while she was fairly quick shots at me with her black eyes.

After the dance I hunted for some one to introduce me to Lillis and was successful. The girl had kinked I was watching her in the dance, and every one of her antics was for me. I wasn't a dancing man and persuaded her to sit out a dance with me. Then a nice looking dapper young fellow took her for another dance, and I looked on again. This time her antics were for me all the same, but they were of another kind. She flushed her eyes alternately at me and into those of the fellow she danced with. I was too stupid to see through this feminine device then, and it had its effect. Quite likely it was the newness of her as well with me, if I had seen through it. When a girl wishes to attract and a fellow wishes to be attracted it's the easiest job in the world.

It wasn't long before I was going to see Lillis. She was an orphan and lived with her grandmother, an old lady deaf as a trolley car conductor whose ear is jammed full of street bangers. She was half blind too. But she must have had by contact with substances if she didn't hear through the ely, and, as for seeing, the darker it was the better chance she had of distinguishing objects. She was like other deaf and blind persons in that respect. She couldn't see or hear what she should see and hear, but had remarkable facilities for detecting what was most inconvenient for others for her to know.

About the time I made Lillis's acquaintance her grandmother was taken with her last illness. Lillie loved the old lady, and her oppressive illness was an affliction to the niece. As for me, I was but twenty-one years old and had years before me in which to do courting, but no impatient was I that I grudged the old lady what little time she needed from Lillie. I feared I would be too old for matrimony before the invalid got into her grave and ceased to require attention.

Now that I look back on this period I can see that I was very unreasonable. I would go to the house and walk a whole evening for Lillie while she remained upstairs with her grandmother, hoping every minute that she could come downstairs for a brief sitting with me. One evening when I had waited a couple of hours in this way I concluded, considering that the old woman was blind and deaf and her imperfect senses must be further doctored by illness, to go upstairs to the sickroom, steal to and see if I couldn't get a word with Lillie.

I tiptoed up the staircase and to the door of the room, which fortunately I found ajar. Lilly was sitting in a chair where she could see me. She came to the door, and I told her that if she couldn't come to me I was bound to go to her. She went back into the room, turned the light very low and beckoned me to enter. There was a safe placed where the invalid could not very well see it. I stole toward it, and Lillie and I sat down side by side with ear arms around each other.

We whispered more love than today, of fifty, I could talk in a year, and to be heard by each other we secretly needed to whisper, for when I spoke my lips touched her coral ear, and when she spoke her lips were a millifouth of an inch from mine.

"What's there?" came from the invalid.

Lillie arose, went to the bed and made a motion as if she would do anything. She replied that she thought she heard something, and told her that she must be mistaken, put her head on the sick woman's head to soothe her and told her she had better try to get a little sleep.

Whether Grandma was satisfied with this or not she said no more, and Lillie, with a coddling her soothe, came back to me. I had been wishing I could hurst the remains of the drum of the old lady's ear with a sneeze, but when Lillie came back I felt better. However, we didn't think it prudent to do any more whispering and refrained. I took a pencil from my pocket and some old letters and wrote what I had to say — very short sentences, in every one of which the word "love" figured conspicuously.

Mem. Instead of choosing as is supposed, appropriate opportunities for proposals, are quite likely to choose the most unfitting. I was unable to even whisper without being heard by a light sleeping old woman, and yet I must needs choose the moment to make a declaration on paper, and ask Lillie to be my wife. She accepted me on paper, and I sealed our engagement with a kiss which was unhesitatingly a smack.

"Lillie!" came from the sickbed.

"What, grandma, dear?"

"Is it raining?"

"No, grandma."

"Oh, I thought I heard something that sounded like thunder."

LANGUAGE FOR MARK TWAIN.

It Came to the Great Humorist Just Before a Christmas.

In the winter of 1895, when Mark Twain was in financial difficulties and his family was in Europe, the great humorist went to live temporarily at the Players club in New York.

Just before Christmas a member named Scott said one day:

"Mr. Clemens, you have an extra overcoat hanging in the cloakroom. I've got to attend my uncle's funeral and it's raining very hard. I'd like to wear it."

The coat was an old one, in the pockets of which Clemens kept a miscellany consisting of pipes, soiled handkerchiefs, neckties, letters, and whatnot.

"Scott," he said, "if you won't lose anything out of the pockets of that coat you may wear it."

An hour or two later Clemens found a notice in his mail box that a package for him was in the office. He called for it and found a tall bundle which somehow had a Christmas look. He carried it up to the reading room with a showy air.

"Now, boys," he said, "you may make all the fun of Christmas you like, but it's pretty nice, after all, to be remembered."

They gathered around and he undid the package. It was filled with the finest of the old handkerchiefs and other articles from the old overcoat. Scott had taken special precautions against losing them.

Mark Twain regarded them in silence, then he drawled:

"Well, hang Scott. I hope his uncle's funeral will be a fat failure."—Book man.

Her Age.

The maiden lady of uncertain age became very indignant when the census taker asked her age.

"Did you see the girls next door?" she asked—"the Hill twins?"

"Yes," the census man answered.

"And did they tell you their ages?"

"Yes."

"Well," she snapped as she slant the door in his face, "I'm just as old as they are."

"Oh, very well!" said the census man to himself, and he wrote down in his book:

Jane Johnson, as old as the Hills.

Gave Him a Hint.

One day, shortly after George M. Cohan began his engagement in Chicago, and before the attaches of the theater there had become used to seeing him at close range, the famous manipulator encountered an old colored woman industriously scrubbing the marble floor of the foyer, chanting the while a doleful dirge-like air.

"Auntie," commented the comedian, "that's a mournful tune you're singing."

"Yes, sir," she answered, "I knows it's mo'nful, but by singin' dat chune sir, mindin' mah own business I spects to git to heaben."

Heard the Call of the Wild.

Senator Earle Chamberlain of Oregon smiled a few nights ago when the topic being talked turned to vacation time. He explained that he was recalled of a recent conversation in a popular cafe.

It was during the lunch hour, the senator said, and four gabby business men were sitting at a table. Outside the air was soft and balmy, and everything in nature was a sweet allurement to buy a railroad ticket and beat it for the woods.

"It is in my system," remarked one of the party decisively, glancing through the open window. "There's nothing so appealing as the call of the wild."

"It may strike you that way, old fellow," responded another, with a fatuous smile, "but right here I beg the privileges of casting a dissenting vote."

"You don't know what you are talking about, Jim," emphatically declared the first. "Did you ever hear the call of the wild?"

"Yes," replied Jim, with something akin to a sigh, "from the head of the stairs the other night, when I didn't get home till 2 o'clock in the morning."—Philadelphia Telegraph.

Persian Inventiveness.

A foreign scientist, traveling to Teheran from Resht, stopped at one of the small stations for some food. The head of the tea house, being asked by the diagoman what he could give them to eat, replied in a very little—only two eggs and a chicken. After a little while the egg was brought in and set upon the table. The diagoman asked where the rest of the meal was. This was the answer: "The chicken was in every sign of laying the second egg, and when he has done so I will bring it to you, and then I will kill her and cook her for you."—From "Peeps Into Persia."

NORTHERN PACIFIC DEPOT SOUTH MAIN STREET

COMPANY NEGOTIATING FOR PURCHASE OF RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH CITY.

THE PASSENGER AND FREIGHT SERVICE IS TO BE IMPROVED.

There is now no doubt that the reports of improvements in the service of the Northern Pacific railway were well founded and it is probable that early in the spring work will be commenced on the construction of a new line through Red Lake Falls that will make possible the construction of a depot near the business section of the city.

Representatives of the railway company are now negotiating for the purchase of a right of way through the city. It is proposed to put the depot on South Main street, about where Dr. Kinney's house stands. From that point the line will run in a south-westerly direction, skirting the built-up portion of the city.

It is evident that the N. P. officials intend to bid for a share of the Red Lake Falls business and there is no doubt that with the improved service they will get a generous share of the business.

With the completion of the new line through the city, better passenger and freight service between Red Grand Forks and Fertile, connecting up with city trains, is to be given.

The improvement will mean for Red Lake Falls not only improved service, but, computing railway service, there is no doubt that Red Lake Falls is to benefit greatly from the change.

MRS. SAM LUXEMBURG.

Pioneer Woman Passed Away Sunday Morning.

Mrs. Luxemburg, wife of Sam Luxemburg, died suddenly Sunday morning, the cause of death being unknown. Mrs. Luxemburg being apparently in good health until shortly before her death.

Early in the morning Mr. Luxemburg was awakened by his wife's heavy breathing. He shook her and tried to arouse her, but could not. He went for a light, and when he returned his wife was dead. Mrs. Luxemburg's death came as a shock to her husband and other members of the family for there had been no warning of her serious illness. The day before she had been in town apparently enjoying good health, and when she retired did not complain of illness.

Caroline Deman was born in Rice county, Minnesota, in September, 1850. She and Mr. Luxemburg were married in December, 1882, and since that time they had lived on the old homestead in Lake Pleasant township. Thirteen children were born to them, nine of them, five sons and four daughters, now living. Mrs. Luxemburg was a faithful mother, wife and friend. Besides her husband and nine children, she leaves four brothers and sisters and numerous other relatives and friends to mourn her untimely death. Funeral services will be held at 11 o'clock Friday morning, Rev. David V. Richardson will officiate.

DAIRYMEN TO MEET NEXT MONTH

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE RED RIVER VALLEY ASSOCIATION.

Preparations are being made for the tenth annual convention of the Red River Valley Dairymen's association, which will take place December 3rd and 4th, in Crookston.

Among the speakers will be J. G. Winkler, dairy and food commissioner; M. Sondergaard, federal inspector of St. Paul; T. A. Hoverstad, agricultural commissioner of the Soo line; H. F. Flint, North Dakota dairy commissioner of Bismarck; Dr. Professor T. L. Haecker, of the University of Minnesota; P. D. Peterson, secretary of the Minnesota Dairymen's association of Minneapolis and Professor F. H. Sargent of the Agricultural school of Crookston.

Prizes for the buttermakers' contest include gold, silver and nickel handled butter fifers. There are also prizes for dairy butter and for cheese.

Creamery butter for the contests must be in 20-pound tubs and must be in Crookston by Dec. 1.

LAURENT-SCHREITER WEDDING.

Popular Young People Married Wednesday Morning.

A wedding of much local interest took place Wednesday, November 12, when Miss Mayme Laurent, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Leon Laurent, and Mr. Norman Schreiter, son of Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Schreiter, were united in marriage. The ceremony was performed at 7:30 in the morning at St. Joseph's church, Rev. Fr. Byrne officiating, and was attended by the immediate relatives of the contracting parties. The bride was beautifully attired in a suit of tan and black gray corduroy. The attendants were Miss Anna Laurent, sister of the bride, Miss Erma Schreiter, sister of the groom, and Mr. Joseph Harmon and Mr. Clem Brunelle.

After the wedding ceremony breakfast was served at Paul's hotel and only people, relatives of the young people and Rev. Fr. Byrne, sat down to the wedding feast and breakfast.

Mr. Schreiter and his bride have gone on a ten days wedding trip. They will visit with relatives in Grand Forks, Minneapolis and St. Cloud. Upon their return they will go to house-keeping in the flat over Mr. Schreiter's store.

Both Mr. Schreiter and his bride have been residents of Red Lake Falls since childhood. They are popular young people and their many friends offer hearty felicitations on the happy occasion.

DR. DUMAS IS OUT ON PAROLE

FORMER CASS LAKE MAYOR, CONVICTED OF ARSON, ENJOYING FREEDOM.

Dr. Delbert F. Dumas, former mayor of Cass Lake, sentenced to the penitentiary in September, 1912, on arson charge, was paroled on Friday. The announcement was made Saturday by C. E. Vasaly, chairman of the parole board.

Dr. Dumas was convicted for conspiring with several associates, including characters in Northern Minnesota in the burning of the Popesky postoffice and for taking part in several subsequent attempts. After his arrest dynamite and explosives were found in his office safe at Cass Lake.

His arrest, trial and conviction were sensational. Chester E. Wilson, state fire marshal, started an investigation of several mysterious fires in the vicinity of Cass Lake. Samuel F. Stevens, a deputy marshal, was assigned to the work and he succeeded, after several sensational escapes, in running down the alleged criminals. Dr. Dumas at the time was mayor of Cass Lake and after his conviction he was leading of 1912 run for re-election but was defeated.

NUMBERING THE CITY

Trees Will be Signs at Street Corners and Houses Will be Numbered.

J. T. Cassidy of the Weber Directory company is in town and will put in some time numbering the city. He has secured authority from the city officials to do the work.

On all street corners he will place boards giving the names of the streets and for a modest charge will place numbers on the houses and business buildings. The blocks will be numbered by hundreds so that it will be possible to allow same when the vacant lots that may be used as the city becomes more populous.

DEPUTY SHERIFF HIGH DRIVER.

Polk County Official Pulled Off Sensational Stunt.

Deputy Sheriff Holt took a jolt, not the 15 cent kind but a real plunge. It happened Saturday afternoon. He was driving between Benalt and Tilden along the railroad tracks near where a culvert has been constructed, but it was dam full of water.

He drove at a skittish team. A freight train puffed passed him and the horses started to run and as suddenly stopped. Holt stood over header over the dashboard into the icy water. Then the nags started ahead again and stopped on him. The three were floundering about in the water when a brakeman leaped from the train and managed to pull Deputy Sheriff Holt out.

It was a decidedly chilly experience, and what time had been lost was fully made up, in the drive to Benlat where Holt hugged a stove till he was dried out sufficiently to resume his journey. His annual Thanksgiving bath will now be unnecessary, the next offence being called for Easter Sunday.—Crookston Times.

FINE ENTERTAINMENT FRIDAY EVENING

PROGRAM WILL NO OOUST BE ONE OF THE FINEST OF THE SEASON.

No doubt one of the best entertainments to be given this season will be Jeanette Jewell Kellogg's program at the Lotus Theatre Friday night, Nov. 14. Mrs. Kellogg has appeared in Red Lake Falls before and delighted her audience. In this evening's entertainment Mrs. Kellogg will be assisted by Miss Gertrude Rolfsen, who will sing several solos, and the Red Lake Falls orchestra will give several selections.

The prices will be 50 cents for reserved seat tickets, 35 cents general admission, 20 cents for children. Tickets are on sale at Bubrideen's drug store.

Death of Mrs. Carpenter.

Mrs. Chas. Carpenter, one of the pioneer women of Red Lake county, died of cancer, Sunday, Nov. 2, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Matt Schein, of Dorothy.

Mrs. Carpenter and her husband came to Red Lake county thirty-five years ago and settled in Lambert township, where they resided for twenty years.

They moved to Lambert township and resided there three years and then went to Canada and settled on a claim. Mr. Carpenter died six years ago and last August Mrs. Carpenter came from Canada and found that time she had been visiting with relatives.

The body was taken to Lambert for burial beside that of her husband. The pall bearers were Mrs. Carpenter's daughters, chosen by her before her death: Mrs. Gerald Pepin, Mrs. John Barrett, Mrs. Fred Mercer, Mrs. Della Stinson, Mrs. Mott Moomaw, Mrs. Jos. Carpenter.

Mrs. Carpenter is survived by eleven children. They are Mrs. George Pepin of Dorothy, Mrs. Thos. Jeffcoats of Kinney, Minn., Mrs. Fred Mercer of White Bear, Mrs. Phil Auguette of Pelican Rapids, Minn., John Barrett of Crookston, Mrs. Della Nickerson of Humbolt, Canada, Mrs. Frank Nickerson of Buffalo, Mrs. Mott Moomaw of Dorothy, and the Carpenters of Dorothy, Adolph Carpenter of Lambert and Fred Carpenter of Prince Albert.

Seeing Them All.

Col. Thomas B. Osborne, who resigned from the Board of Mississippi, to become Secretary of the Hospital Commission, allowed a remark to escape him for which the good Baptists of Jim City may take him to task.

Colonel Osborne is an ex-Confederate. He is also an ardent Baptist. Both coons close to his heart. His friend stopped Colonel Osborne and inquired whether he was going to the Confederate reunion at Charlottesville.

"I am sorry I can not," said Colonel Osborne. "General Bennett H. Young is urging me to attend the reunion to meet my old comrades because I may never see them again. But I shall attend Young. I was sure to meet all Confederates in heaven but I must meet my Baptist friends first. I can.—Louisville Manufacturers Home Journal.

OFFICIAL TIME TO BE THANKFUL

PROCLAMATION DESIGNATES THURSDAY, NOV. 27, THANKSGIVING DAY.

"The season is at hand in which it has been our long respected custom as a people to turn in praise and thanksgiving to Almighty God for His manifold mercies and blessings to us as a nation. The year that has just passed has been marked in a peculiar degree by manifestations of His gracious and beneficient favor. We have not only had peace throughout our own borders and with the nations of the world, but that peace has been heightened by constantly multiplying evidences of genuine friendship, of mutual understanding, and of the kindliest spirit of any elevating influences both of ideal and practice.

"The nation has not only been prosperous, but has proved its capacity to take calm council amidst the rapid movement of affairs and deal with its own life in a spirit of candor, righteousness and comity. We have seen the practical completion of a great work at the Isthmus of Panama which not only exemplifies the nation's abundant resources to accomplish what it will, and the distinguished skill, and capacity of its public servants, but also promises the beginning of a new era in new contracts, new neighbors, new sympathies, new bonds and new achievements of co-operation and peace.

"Righteousness exalteth a nation' and peace comes, and good will toward men' furnish the only foundations upon which can be built lasting achievements of human spirit. The year has brought us the satisfaction of work well done and fresh visions of our duty which make the work of the future better still.

"Now, therefore, I, Woodrow Wilson, president of the United States of America, do hereby designate Thursday, the Twenty-seventh day of November next, as a day of Thanksgiving and prayer, and invite the people throughout the land to cease from their occupations and in their several homes and places of worship render thanks to Almighty God.

"In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

"Done at the City of Washington this 23rd day of October, in the year of Our Lord one thousand nine hundred and thirteen and of the independence of the United States of America, the one hundred and eighty eighth.

"Woodrow Wilson."

ALFALFA SEED.

Arrangements Being Made for Convenient Distribution to Farmers.

The Gazette has received the following communication from Prof. MacKenzie, secretary of the Northern Minnesota Development association:

"I am authorized by Dean Christianson of the Agricultural school at Crookston to announce that a limited quantity of alfalfa seed, which will be delivered at Crookston, from some other central point at $12 per bushel, in "Montana Grimms" variety guaranteed and verified for us by the Department of Agriculture of the state. This was done some of this seed in your vicinity if you will kindly write to me as soon as you find out how many you can use. There is no question whatever but that every farmer in your vicinity should use some 12 pounds per acre. Be sufficient to seed one acre. Before seeding in the spring, however, the farmer should consult with the nearest high school or county agricultural agent just how to prepare his land and seed it, as different kinds of soil may require different methods of preparation and seeding.

"If you wish you can write Mr. C. G. Selvig, Superintendent, State Farm School, Crookston, and order directly from him."

LITTLE DONE AT FIRST SESSION

REORGANIZATION COMMISSION HANDICAPPED FOR LACK OF FUNDS.

St. Paul—(Special)—Economy and efficiency, the announced campaign slogan of two candidates for governor, A. O. Eberhart and State Auditor Iverson, had the first innings when the governor's economy commission of thirty met and discussed the task assigned it. Governor Eberhart was not there, because he was not in the city; neither was Mr. Iverson for the reason that he was not invited, but the absence of the two did not detract from the seriousness of this discussion or the final acceptance by the commission of the task assigned it. George F. Augustine, the governor's private secretary, was on the job and he practically piloted the members over the rough spots in order to start the game going well as to subcommittee of seven. These committees will report later and then the plans will be divided into parts and assigned to committees. It was the intention to have the report in its rerules tractured, of course, by that time, known as the mss. with a mission. Happily these are in the minority and if neither from the remarks made by those who were present to do something that they will be kept in the background.

Launched on the eve of a political campaign, with two democratic candidates striving for the advertising that will result, the governor's efficiency economy commission starts off with handicaps. It would have been better had the movement been started with the close of the last legislature. But it was not and so it has had to start never. The task before the commission is to recommend to the next session of the legislature such changes in the state's administrative machinery as will result in the greatest economy. It may not do away with some of the useless boards that now exist, but it will prevent the establishment of new ones. Compared with other states Minnesota is not extravagant in its expenditures. It does not spend by half what Wisconsin does and the "efficiencists" are pointed to as a model. Then the commission's board is supreme and the habit of criticism and the fear of graft is so latent that has become burdensome. These boards are the result of the progressive movement of the last five years and the disease has been grafted only yesterday into Minnesota. Curb them now and Governor Eberhart's commission will have done a world of good.

The last legislature gave all departments a flat allowance and declared that all the boredoms retained be turned into the treasury. During the years of last year, when the fees were retained the game and fish commission had receipts of the state amounting to $1,000,000. This year for the same period only $400,000 were received, making of course the treasury. Something wrong somewhere.

The Norwegian committee named by Governor Eberhart to arrange for a Minnesota exhibit at the Norwegian Fair, which is to be held next spring, next year, has decided to raise $10,000 for the work. It also has agreed that the state appropriation be applied to care for the exhibit while there.

The state capitol blagmakers have been flirting this week with the name of Fred Sardor of Minneapolis and their bunch is the last but will soon be in the gubernatorial ring. They don't know that he is going to run but there are whispers, and whispers with them comes pretty near being authoritative, that he is back of the woods Mr. Snyder is accepted as a man of wealth and the supposition is that he will separate himself from a part of it in effort to satisfy his ambitions, but the best posted are not overconfident of his ambitions as the salaries run with the sum of money. To them it simply means an additional gumming up of the cards with Governor Eberhart the keen favorite. Whether the field is one or more Eberhart took the lead at this. Sometimes I am inclined to take that view myself, still there is a lot to be said about the cup and the slip. There have been some wrecks that went broke at the well.

Minnesota's new women's minimum wage commission, a creation of the last legislature, will get started rather old, but it has little to show in the way of results for the $5,000 the legislators intrusted to its keeping. The secretary, Miss Elisa Evans, admits that she is quite a new hand at the commission to secure from women wage earners statistics covering the cost of living have been a complete failure. The women simply will not respond. I know that Labor Commissioner Houck, who is a member of the board, looks upon the whole thing as a farce, for he has so expressed himself. He was hinted when the law was passed that it was in the interest of a few job hunters, and to speak plainly he considers it to date but an

COURT ADJOURNED THIS AFTERNOON

WORK OF THE NOVEMBER TERM COMPLETED IN FOUR DAYS.

ONE CRIMINAL CASE—SEVERAL CIVIL CASES WERE DISPOSED OF.

The November general term of district court, Judge Wm. Watts presiding, adjourned at 2 o'clock this afternoon after having been in session since Monday. The work of the term was disposed of in four days.

There was only one criminal case on the calendar, that of the state against Gust Egeland, a young man 19 years old, of Equality township, charged with bastardy. The complaining witness was Anna Bakkegaard, 19 years old and also a resident of Equality township. The defendant was found guilty of the charge and was required to pay the costs of the action and $400.

Several damage suits against railroad companies were disposed of. Louis Steff got $65 for injury to his trotting mare, "Joliette." This is the case of Louis Steff, ar. against the Great Northern.

Mary Sherva while walking on a sidewalk on the Great Northern right-of-way at St. Hilaire stepped on a loose board. The board flew up, striking her in the forehead, breaking the bone. Her suit against the railroad company was settled by the payment to her of $200.

Leon Rejadean, employed on the Soo line section at Plummer had a finger cut off during the course of his work he asked for $300 and the jury awarded him $200.

The case of Louis Steff against the Northern Pacific was settled just before court adjourned this afternoon. Mr. Steff asked damages in the amount of $600 and the company agreed to the payment of $397.

County Attorney Chas. E. Houghton was the prosecuting attorney in each of these damage suits.

The case of Fergus Falls against R. J. McKercher was settled, Mr. McKercher paying the claim.

The case of Fred Schmahl against the Wylie Farmers' Elevator company was dismissed, also the case of Julius S. Lervick against Julius Pieth.

Several cases were continued.

RIVAL CANDIDATES SLEEP ON CUSHIONS

SECRETARY OF STATE SAYS BLUFF AT "SIMPLE LIFE" IS "CHEAP POLITICS."

Crookston, Minn., Nov. 11.—With two candidates for governor in the party, the Polk county Democratic convention is traveling in truly democratic style.

Hereafter on its trips into the Northern swamps, where accommodations are poor at the best, the two candidates will be wined in a cabin car. All is changed this year. Governor Eberhart and State Auditor Iverson, rivals for governor, are mingling with the masses. When the car was first planned Mr. Iverson objected to the luxurious feature. Secretary of State Schmahl wanted to continue the private car custom and opposed Governor Eberhart. Unwilling to give his opponent a chance to make political capital, the Governor ordered the car retained.

This so disgusted Mr. Schmahl that he left the party at Moorhead late last night for home, and his assistant, James A. Larson, met the commission here today and will complete the trip.

"It is cheap politics," said Mr. Schmahl before he left, in a mighty huff. "Iverson and Eberhart have lived in a cabin car. All is changed this year. Governor Eberhart and State Auditor Iverson, rivals for governor, are mingling with the masses. When the car was first planned Mr. Iverson objected to the luxurious feature. Secretary of State Schmahl wanted to continue the private car custom and opposed Governor Eberhart. Unwilling to give his opponent a chance to make political capital, the Governor ordered the car retained."

INCOME TAX LAW IS NOW EFFECTIVE

WASHINGTON TREASURY OFFICIALS RECEIVE THOUSANDS OF INQUIRIES.

EVEN WALL STREET AT SEA

Claims Not to Know How Collections Are to Be Made—Expresses Confidence All Will Work Out Well in End.

Washington, Nov. 3.—Although millions are expected to flow into the public treasury through the operation of the income tax law which now becomes operative, much confusion prevails throughout the country as to how and at what sources the tax is to be collected. Reports reached Washington that even Wall Street men professed to be hopelessly at sea as to the intent and scope of the law.

While it is recognized here that the income tax is the most revolutionary power conferred in the American government since its foundation, optimists are predominant who say that all will be working well in a few weeks.

Optimists Are Predominant.

Although an income tax has been agitated for many years, and its existence was assured by an amendment to the constitution agreed to by the necessary number of states early last spring, its collection by a government which has not tried it will strain the resources of the fertile minds in the treasury department and will be accomplished. It is not doubted here, with a thousand complications not now foreseen.

Ever since President Wilson signed the tariff bill with its income tax provision, early in the present month, the machinery of the treasury department has been at work upon the regulations that are to govern the collection of the tax. It has been a task that has kept Assistant Secretary William Phillips, Deputy Commissioner of Internal Revenue Speer and other officials constantly at work and the end is not in sight.

Many Inquiries Received.

Mr. Williams said that the regulations of the department were not difficult to understand, but in the same other officials in the department do not agree. Thousands of letters and telegrams, bringing for settlement points in the new law, have poured into the department.

They have come from every conceivable source and added to the labor of making regulations, have made the task of the experts one not to be envied.

No one in the treasury department believes that the regulations so far formulated are perfect, but they will stand until some one proves that they should be changed, and officials are not inclined to believe that expert lawyers employed by big corporations particularly concerned with collection "at the source" of income on bonds, mortgages, salaries, etc., have failed to understand them.

Since the administration began framing an income tax law the talk has gone the rounds in Washington that it would lead to many fights in the courts, and as the tariff bill progressed through the senate, many a senator solemnly expressed the view that every line of the income tax provision was subject for a lawsuit.

Business to Go Merry.

With the lawsuits the treasury department has little concern. It is not looking for them; its intention is to go out and get the money, and that is what it is trying to do. Officials believe that the regulations they have put out, framed, not with an idea of causing trouble to those who must pay, but in the only way they could be found to safeguard the government's interest. The man in the street who knows he makes more than $3,000 a year and who is personally responsible for the share of the tax, does not need to begin worrying about his payment for the present. The operation of the law affects only banks, corporations and others responsible for payment on bonds, mortgages, salaries, etc.

For such persons their care bound by the law they must withhold 1 per cent of the amount. The amounts so withheld are not payable immediately to the treasury, and the money from the tax will not begin owing into the treasury vaults for many months.

The tax for 1913 is to be collected from March 1, shortly after the constitutional amendment was ratified, until Dec. 31. Collectors and agents, however, must begin deducting the normal tax of one per cent at the source now, withholding it for November and December.

O'Hara is a Hobo.

Chicago, Nov. 6.—Barrett O'Hara, lieutenant governor of Illinois, is a hobo. It became known when E. Jeff Davis, president of the National Hobo union, reported the fact in an address at a meeting of the Chicago Federation of Labor. Later O'Hara admitted it and announced that he is proud of the connection. "I met the lieutenant governor at a ball," said the "King of the Hobos," "and he told me that once he had been down and out. I told him that entitled him to membership and I pledged him."

Marriage Makes No Difference.

Atlanta City, Mo., Nov. 4.—A married man may spend all the time he pleases with another man's wife, or vice versa, so long as the man supports his family and the woman does not neglect her children and the law can do nothing about it. This is the decision of Judge E. C. Bland in the municipal court in the case of Mrs. Marie Smith. She had been arrested on complaint of the sister-in-law of the man in the case, whose wife is sal invalid. Mrs. Smith's husband is in town.

BAD RAIL WRECK IN FRANCE; 40 DEAD

SCORES ARE INJURED IN WORST CRASH IN NATION'S HISTORY.

HAPPENED CLOSE TO MELUN

Main Train and Passenger in Head-on Collision—One Very Pitiful Incident of Catastrophe.

Mail Train Hits Express.

A mail train, made up entirely of baggage cars, collided head on with an express from Marseilles to Paris.

The majority of the dead are believed to be postal clerks, of whom there were fifty or more at work when the collision occurred. The Marseilles-Paris day express is a train much used by Americans, but none had been identified among the dead and injured.

President Poincare and his wife motored to the scene of the wreck.

Captain Carried to Death.

One of the most pitiful incidents of the catastrophe was the death of Inspector Captain Kilby. Seven years he was planed for ten hours during the night under the heavy iron of the mail train. He begged the doctors to put him out of his misery. They quieted him with morphine, and he died before he could be extricated.

The engineer of the express train admitted that the wreck was his fault, but he failed to heed a stop signal. He is under arrest.

"BIG TIM" LIKELY MURDERED

Believed That Late New York Politician Victim of Vendetta.

London, Nov. 6. — Exclusive information has been received by officials of the government here which indicates that "Big Tim" Sullivan, the New York politician, was murdered instead of being a suicide or the victim of an accident. Records of a suspect are being hunted.

From the tenor of the communication from the New York police it is evident that the theory now held by Sullivan's friends is that of a political vendetta. It is said here that the New York police possess what is believed to be almost identical proof that the body of Sullivan is not that of the man identified after he had been killed by an assassin.

The London police are active to following up the clues which have been furnished by the New York authorities.

Wrong Addresses Cost U. S.

Washington, Nov. 6.—"Prank" addressed mail matter will be a thing of nature be frowned on by Postmaster General Burleson and postal officials all over the country. Mr. Burleson has directed postmasters to use every proper means to impress upon the public in the correct method of addressing mail. The campaign was decided upon when a recent investigation in Chicago showed that, of 4,000 pieces of first class mail handled, 204,036, or 44 per cent, were insufficiently or improperly addressed, and it developed that, to supply correct addresses, cost the postal department $12,000 annually in Chicago alone.

Mitchel's Plurality is 121,209.

New York, Nov. 6.—Complete returns from the state canvass officials show that John Purroy Mitchell, fusion candidate for mayor, carried Mt. Call, Tammany, by 121,209 to Charles Edward Russell, socialist, polled a total of 42,534. Mitchell led behind his ticket in all five boroughs.

Reservoir Ceremonies are Held.

Los Angeles, Nov. 6.—Eight years of labor and the expenditure of nearly $30,000,000 had their fruition when the water of the Los Angeles aqueduct, drawn from the Sierras, 250 miles away, came today through into the big San Bernardo reservoir, 23 miles north of the city.

Picking Blue Points; Loses Finger

Bridgeport, Nov. 6. — Arthur Ellwell, manager of a downtown cafe, had his left hand opened finger bitten off by an oyster while he was opening fresh Blue Points for a particular customer.

Ora Records are Broken.

Duluth, Nov. 6.—The record ore shipments for 1913 already have been broken by the total shipments from the Minnesota ranges to the end of the Nov. 1 of this year. Reports on the ore traffic at the Superior head from all the ports show that 37,343,412 tons have been shipped since the season opened. This is 2,546,116 tons more than was shipped in the corresponding period of 1912. It is 3,000,000 tons more than the total shipment of last year.

Henning Admits Conspiracy.

Chicago, Nov. 6.—John C. Henning testified that he had agreed, for money, to lend his wife's name and honor to a suit for alienation of affections which he had brought against Clarence S. Funk, president of the Funsly company. He admitted he had an understanding with Attorney Daniel Donahoe, who is on trial with Isaac Stiefel, a detective, for alleged conspiracy to defame Mr. Funk. "That's about right," was Henning's reply to an in quiry whether money was all he was after.

AWFUL SCOURGE OF WAR IN MEXICO

Whether it be Federalists or Constitutionalists that pass through a Mexican town, the result in the same—death and devastation. This photograph was taken in the city of Torreon just after the revolutionists had attacked the place and depicts vividly the horrors of the civil war that is devastating the Rio Grande.

MRS. HARRIETT G. DALEY

Mrs. Daley, chief telephone operator of the capitol at Washington, has supervision of the wires of almost 600 national legislators and could, if she would, tell some interesting tales. But she will not.

MAKES POISONS HARMLESS

MAY BE TAKEN BY ACCIDENT WITH IMPUNITY.

Indo Rubber Composition Withstands Action of Acids of the Stomach, Inventor Proves.

New York, Nov. 4.—That Gilbert I. Stradola, a chemist, had swallowed a poisonous tablet to prove the form of capsule he had invented was "foolproof," was the statement made by Dr. Charles Pabst, in whose office at 396 Franklin avenue, Brooklyn, the remarkable experiment was made. He wanted a tablet that would be harmless if swallowed by accident.

Stradola and Dr. Pabst made many experiments in trying to discover a substance for covering the poison that would be insoluble in the acids of the stomach. Last Wednesday Dr. Pabst announced to Dr. Pabst he had discovered a combination of India rubber and other substances that would make a tough coating harmless in the stomach. Only by tearing off the cover could any one get the poison inside. Stradola claims, Stradola said, followed one of his capsules last Sunday in Dr. Pabst's office, with Dr. J. W. Edgerly as a witness. Dr. Pabst announced that the chemist experienced no ill effects. Not an atom of the poison entered his system.

Dr. Pabst said that the formula for the manufacture of the covering would be given to the world.

INDIANAPOLIS HAS REIGN OF DISORDER

MUCH RIOTING AND STREET CARS HELD IN BARNS.

TRACTION COMPANY HELPERS

Sheriff is Charged With Playing Politics in Summoning Deputies—Are Refuse to Face Attack of Mob.

Indianapolis, Nov. 5.—The third day of the strike of the Indianapolis traction and terminal company employes ended with no attempt to move cars which have remained in the barns since the strike began.

Electics Charges Mob.

Charges that politics has caused the police to fail to give the traction company sufficient protection to run its cars were made by candidates for office at mass meetings held at the call of Sheriff Portteus to swear in 200 citizen deputies resulted in the charge being made that he had summoned the men chiefly to reduce their activities at the polls.

The strike situation was further complicated when a suit for the annulment and forfeiture of the traction company's franchise and the appointment of a receiver for the company was filed in the circuit court. The suit was filed by Attorney C. Pearson, acting as a taxpayer, and it alleges that the company, by its failure to operate cars for the last three days has violated its franchise contract. The motion to have suit was made returnable Nov. 13.

Chauffeur is Shot.

After a day in which numerous minor riots were reported, Thomas Carlock, a chauffeur, was shot and fatally wounded while watching a crowd of sympathizers gather at the Indianapolis car barns where the strike breakers were housed.

Robert L. Todd, president of the traction company; John J. Mahoney, superintendent, and Superintendent of Police Hyland were hissed and forced to run for their terminal station when the mounted police forced the crowds back. Todd and Mahoney again were attacked while passing the state house building and forced to take refuge in a store room to await a shower of bricks and stones thrown from the state house lawn and from balconies of nearby buildings. The mounted police made it possible for Todd and Mahoney to reach their offices.

Police Refuse to Act.

Four of the policemen assigned to guard the strike breakers in bringing in the cars, refused to mount the police forme to protect non-union men. Mr. Reed declared no further effort would be made to run cars until assured that the men would have ample protection.

Pepper Thrown on Asquith.

London, Nov. 3.—Suffragists attacked premier Asquith again, throwing pepper on him and trying to get at him with whips as he motored from Lanhort house to Stirling.

Italian Suffragettes Active.

Rome, Nov. 4.—Incidental to the second ballots in the general Italian elections, a mob attacked the offices of the Messagero, the organ of the "Bloc," smashing windows, and assaulting the staff. The Bloc candidates were characterized by greater excitement than the first ones. Suffragettes participated, rushing about in cabs and motors, distributing literature and urging their followers to vote for candidates favoring women's suffrage. Several violent scenes occurred.

Pike's Peak Isn't Sinking.

Washington, Nov. 4.—The United States has again put a stop to Americans furnishing a rival for "London Bridge is Falling Down," which is attached in the more recent tale about the sinking of Pike's Peak. The landmark that was the goal of hundreds of caravans that crossed the plains in '49 hasn't sunk an inch, in the opinion of the experts of the federal geological survey. A story from Denver that Pike's Peak had sunk 20 feet in the last year is ridiculed.

HUERTA IS GIVEN NO CHOICE

RUMORED WILSON MAKES A THREAT TO FORCE HIM OUT

Friends of Mexican President Regard Note to Huerta Really as an Ultimatum.

Mexico City, Nov. 6.—The undercurrent of conversation at the national palace during rumors regarding President Huerta's attitude in the face of Washington's demands that he retire, but the president himself preserved an enigmatical reserve.

Huerta's intimates are familiar with the terms of the communication, which they regard as practically mandatory. The communication from the administration at Washington states that unless General Huerta retires immediately and thereafter has nothing to do with the conduct of affairs or the formation of a new government, the president of the United States will cease to recognize, and will reject, will cause him to call upon the power to authorize him to use sterner methods.

The language used caused Huerta's friends to regard the document as communication in itself as conclusive, since General Huerta is given no choice regarding further participation in Mexico's official affairs.

TRUST PROGRAM CONSIDERED

President Discusses Coming Legislation With Senators.

Washington, Nov. 5.—President Wilson is now convinced that there is no possibility of getting a trust and currency bill in this special session of congress. Members of the senate committee have assured the president that there is little chance of a report by the committee before the middle of the month, and that the other committees of congress will be well under way before anything like final consideration of the measure can be expected of the senate.

The president discussed the trust legislation with Senators Clarke, of Newlands and Representative Clayton. It was said anti-trust bills are expected to be patterned after the "Sherman law of New Jersey, enacted at the dictation of the present while he was governor of that state. They will supplement, in other things, a prohibition on inter-locking directorates.

In the same way that he wishes to bring out the anti-trust legislation as the product of "common counsel" the president has been paving the way for his conservation program by informal conferences.

Mrs. Pankhurst is Perturbed.

Chicago, Nov. 5.—Revelations of suffering undergone by Miss Sylvia Pankhurst recently greatly perturbed her mother, Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst, here when she received a letter from her other daughter, Christabel. The letter stated that Miss Sylvia wants to have her subjected to forcible feeding after being "starved to death an inch of her life."

"Sylvia is a brave and successful fight Monday, but on Tuesday was taken by policemen and a crowd collection of plain clothes men," ran the letter.

Harrow Get About $100,000.

Pittsburg, Pa., Nov. 5.—Nearly $100,000 is disbursed to heroes or their relatives by the Carnegie Hero Fund commission in its report just made public. The commission distributes immediately $91,000 in awards of $3,000 and $1,500. There are 16 awards of $3,000 and 38 of $1,500. The remainder are in awards consisting of watches, took all the cash in sight, and fled. A crowd of citizens who pursued the robbers caught one. The other escaped.

Insanity to Be Defense.

Minneapolis.—Testimony of alienists and friends and associates of Mrs. Ida Annis Lockwood, on trial before Judge Jolley, charged with the murder of her daughter, Viola, will be given, according to M. C. Brady, her attorney, to show that she has been a chronic epileptic for years. Witnesses will be called to prove that her condition is hereditary and that the treatment received from her husband, younger, harsh treatment and abuse, aggravated her physical weakness.

SULZER WINS OUT IN N. Y.

RUNS AS PROGRESSIVE FOR ASSEMBLY.

Is Believed That His Vote is Larger Than That of Both Opponents.

New York, Nov. 6.—William Sulzer, ousted from the governorship of New York last summer by verdict of a high court of impeachment, was elected to the state assembly from the Sixth district by a plurality, estimated at 2,000 or more. He ran on the Progressive ticket and apparently polled more votes than his Republican and Democratic opponents combined. In the neighborn on the East side rallied strongly to his support.

There was a jubilation in the former governor's headquarters as the count began to record his victory. Sulzer was all smiles.

Sulzer regarded his triumph as a vindication, he said, and issued a statement thanking his supporters and scoring Charles F. Murphy, leader of Tammany Hall, who, he declared, was the author of the vote that gave the district William Sulzer as its representative at Albany.

"The people of the Sixth assembly district," said Sulzer in his statement, "think better of me than of Mr. Murphy. They know why Murphy removed me from the governorship; they know when Mr. Murphy asked me to do wrong I refused to do wrong; they know when Mr. Murphy tried to bribe me I refused to be bribed; they know when Mr. Murphy threatened me I defied his threats.

"Mr. Murphy has now condemned Mr. Murphy; reversed the judgment of his high court of impeachment, vindicated me by the verdict of the polls, which in the last analysis, is the opinion of mankind.

"From Mr. Murphy's high court of infamy I appeal to the high court of public opinion. Mr. Murphy says that there was no appeal from his court, but Mr. Murphy was mistaken. He knows that the judgment of the people can reverse the judgment of any court."

Sulzer made his fight for election to the assembly on the lines of the statewide Progressive platform, and a whirlwind affair, demonstrations greeting him wherever he spoke. He barely went outside of his district, but his speeches within that territory were broadcast and sent to many organization in its city-wide and state campaign as an appeal to his immediate constituency.

MAN BEATS GAME OF DEATH

Makes Good Saying He Cannot Be Killed by Miraculous Escapes.

Kansas City, Mo., Nov. 5.—L. E. Trout, known among his friends as "the man who cannot be killed," had his nerve escape from a serious injury in his third mishap within a few years. His motorcycle-buggy ran into a creek and was reduced to scrap, from which the owner was extricated.

Here years ago Trout fell 170 feet from the top of an office building upon which he was working, crashed through a skylight, and landed on the floor. His injuries consisted of a few bruises and a scratched skin.

His second accident, happening about a year ago, resulted in a broken arm. Trout was somersaulted over a high bridge by policemen and a motorcycle collided with a car.

Citizens Recover Bank Loot.

Mount Vernon, Ill., Nov. 6.—Four men were captured and $5,000 of the $10,000 taken from the Jefferson State bank. Two robbers escaped. Mrs. Morgan, president of the bank, into the vault and turned the combination. They then held one cashier and his assistant at bay with revolvers, took all the cash in sight, and fled. A crowd of citizens who pursued the robbers caught one. The other escaped.

Pardoned Dynamiter Released.

Los Angeles, Nov. 6.—The "poor health" of Ortie E. McManigal, the confessed dynamiter, is the reason given by District Attorney Fredericks for ordering what he believed to be the permanent release from jail of the ailing secretary of the McNamara brothers and chief witness in the thirty-three labor union officials, according to Lecompte-Wells, counsel for McManigal has been in poor health for some time," said Mr. Fredericks in explanation of his order.

TAMMANY FORCES ARE BADLY BEATEN

MITCHEL WINS MAYORALTY IN NEW YORK CITY BY 75,000 PLURALITY.

DEMOCRATS SCORE IN MASS.

Walsh Elected Governor—Republicans Score Big Gain in New York State on Anti-Tammany Ticket.

New York, Nov. 5.—Fusion carried New York City, electing John Purroy Mitchel mayor by approximately 75,000 plurality and retaining control of the important board of estimate by a safe margin.

Tammany Hall now its nominee for the mayoralty, Edward E. McCall go down to defeat by one of the big gest pluralities ever given against a candidate of the organization and it may not have saved even the New York county offices by one of the wreckage.

Mitchel Pulls Ticket Through.

The big vote for Mitchel pulled through the Fusion candidates for president of the board of aldermen and comptroller, George McAneny and whom independence league as well as Democratic organization candidates were running.

The election of Mitchel was early apparent, but not until nearly two-thirds of the returns were in was the success of McAneny and Prendergast assured.

Scant Favors to Tammany.

Apparently, with the exception of assemblymen in the districts which usually go Democratic and a number of score in some of the boroughs, the opposition to Tammany was for electing only one of its nominees, Maurice E. Connolly, for borough president of Queens.

The Fusionists elected borough presidents in Manhattan, the Bronx, and Richmond, and apparently have united through the election for president of the borough of Manhattan, Marcus M. Marks, by a small plurality over Dr. Thomas Churchill, Tammany.

The result thus indicated would leave Tammany but one vote out of eleven in the board of estimate, which controls the city's purse.

A Fusion majority in the board of aldermen also seems assured.

Walsh Elected Governor.

Boston, Mass.—David I. Walsh, a Democrat and distinguished member of the bar, was elected governor by a plurality estimated at 50,000. The Democratic leaders claim a complete return from the state house and the returns tabulated seem to support this claim.

The legislature continues Republican in both branches, with slightly increased majorities.

In the Third congressional district, Caleb S. Paige, Republican, was chosen to succeed the late William H. Wicker, Republican, in a very close race.

Republicans Get N. Y. State.

New York.—Sweeping gains were made by Republicans in the state this state, following a campaign in which the issue of Tammany Hall was raised with almost as much vigor outside New York City as in the campaign here.

Indications, based on incomplete returns were that the Republican party had lost control of the lower branch of the legislature.

The Tabulated Returns.

Returns from 58 of the 150 assembly districts in the state out of the election of 66 Republicans, 29 Democrats and 2 Progressives, with one in doubt. Nine of the successful Democratic assemblymen and one of the Republicans were endorsed by the Progressives.

Municipal election were held in 34 cities. Returns from 18 of the larger cities showed election of either Republican mayors, four Democrats, three Socialists, five Progressive and one citizens' party.

Some of Those Elected.

Nine judges of the Seventh court and two judges of the court of appeals were elected, the first county Herbert P. Bissell, Democrat, and Harry L. Taylor, Republican, were elected to the supreme court bench. Incomplete returns from other counties showed that the Democratic state ticket were running in the lead.

Two Democratic members of congress were elected, both replacing Democrats.

Schanectady's Socialist mayor, Geo. R. Lunn, went down to defeat.

The Progressives elected their most striking victory in Syracuse, Louis Will, their candidate for mayor.

E. Dolan, Democrat, and Eugene J. Mack, Republican.

Democrats Sweep Maryland Clean.

Baltimore, Md., Nov. 6.—Based on incomplete returns in 14 counties but which are taken to indicate the final result, State Senator Hair Lee, Democrat, has been elected to the United States senate to fill the unexpired term of the late Isador Rayner by an estimated plurality of, from 30,000 to 35,000 over Representative Blair Lee, of Parran, Republican, and former United States Senator Arthur Gorman, Bullington, Progressive. The Democrats were victorious all along the line.

STATE NEWS IN BRIEF

MRS. JOHN LIND IS GENUINE HEROINE

SAVES TWO MEXICAN LEGISLATORS FROM HUERTA'S MEN.

HID THEM IN HER STATEROOM

While Troops Patrol Ship Two Refugees Stay in Hiding in Her Stateroom and Succeed In Escaping Detection.

New York, Nov. 3.—Mrs. John Lind, wife of the special ambassador to Mexico, arrived here on the steamer Morro Castle in the role of a genuine heroine.

Mrs. Lind brought two Mexican legislators, who saw their liberty, if not their lives, to her quick wit and generosity. To save them she was Mexicans from arrest at Vera Cruz, Mrs. Lind hid them in her stateroom and sat up all night on deck until the boat left port and the officers of the Huerta government had gone ashore.

Huerta Detained Vessel.

A week ago the cabling brought word that the Ward liner, Morro Castle, had been detained at Vera Cruz while Huerta's agents searched for slight rebellious members of the legislature of the state of Vera Cruz. Until the Morro Castle arrived here only those aboard knew that two of the eight "deputies" had escaped arrest. These two, Adolfo Domingues and Miguel A. Cordera, say they will stay in New York until Mexico becomes a safer home for the opponents of Huerta.

Mrs. Lind said that her husband had expected to return home after the Mexican election. Now she did not know when he would come.

Mrs. Lind Tells Story.

"We expected that the Morro Castle would sail from Vera Cruz," said Mrs. Lind, "at 4 o'clock on the afternoon of Oct. 31. Captain Wheeler of the Morro Castle was subpoenaed to testify regarding the flight of Dr. Francisco Vazquez Gomez, who had sailed on the Morro Castle five months before. Later we learned that the real reason for our detention was that the government wished to search the ship for eight state legislators from the city of Jalapa. They arrested six of these men, but they did not find the others and I'll tell you why.

"While the search was going on, the friends of these two men learned that I was on board and they came with tears in their eyes, begging me to help them. I said: 'Here's the key to my stateroom. Take it.' That was all they needed. I spent the night on deck and the two men hid in my room until the detectives gave up the search and went ashore. Then the ship was released and we sailed at 8 o'clock the next morning."

The wife of the special envoy is a housewifey little woman with quiet manners and a few votes, but her eyes flashed as she asserted:

"I could not bear to think of those men being taken ashore and hanged. I just had to do something for them."

Americans Have Experience.

Two other Americans aboard the Morro Castle, Courtney Hebren and Kane Knox, employees of the American Smelting & Refining company, have had an experience with Domingues and Cordera. They were rumore that Huerta's agents stayed aboard until the ship reached Progreso, on the afternoon of Oct. 25. The first night out of Vera Cruz, Mr. Hebren said that Domingues left their cabin door open, room yelling in Spanish: "They're after me! They're after me!" Mr. Hebren ran on deck and into the arms of a squad of Mexican soldiers.

"Are you an American," they demanded. Hebren said he was and they made no attempt to detain him.

"When I returned to my stateroom," the American said, "I found Domingues inside with the door barred."

Weshburn-Crosby Embezzler Found.

Minneapolis.—John C. Schildknecht, embezzler of $15,000 from the New York office of the Washburn-Crosby Company, has been found in a rooming house in Brooklyn. Two automobiles of the racing type are all that the Washburn-Crosby Company here to show for the $15,000 taken during a period of six months through a system of "kiting" accounts by the 23-year-old clerk, who was paid $20 a week. One car was used in the Vanderbilt cup race two years ago. His escapes from scores of detectives read like fiction.

Minnesota Butter Wins First.

St. Paul.—Minnesota not only captured the state banner at the national butter show in Chicago, but her butter-makers also were awarded the gold and silver medals in the individual competition. Q. N. Peterson, Rapidan, gets the gold medal with a score of 96.83 points, and A. Camp, Owatonna, the silver medal, with a score of 96.50. The state banner is given for the highest average of ten highest scores, and was awarded to Minnesota for the ninth time on an average of 96.245. Iowa was second and Wisconsin third.

Brainerd Proud of Schools.

Brainerd.—The high school of Brainerd boasts a record of 100 per cent attendance for the past month. The manual training, school library and normal departments of the Brainerd schools are proving very successful.

Minnesota Town Has Fire.

Alexandria.—Early Sunday H. O. Amundson's Riverside Manufacturing company's plant was totally destroyed by fire. The loss on the building and machinery is about $12,000, with an insurance of about $10,000.

WOULD SAVE STATE $3,500,000 YEARLY

J. O. A. PREUS, STATE INSURANCE COMMISSIONER, GIVES SOME SIGNIFICANT FIGURES.

SEEKS FIRE PREVENTION AID

Says If People Were Properly Aroused Much Good Would Result—State Officials to Confer In New York City Relative to Rates.

St. Paul.—The average per capita fire loss in the state of Minnesota for the past ten years has been $2.02. The average per capita loss in the leading European countries is 23 cents, or approximately one-sixth the loss in this state. These are interesting figures with which State Insurance Commissioner J. O. A. Preus prefaces a scheme for saving the people nearly $3,500,000 annually.

Losses Might Be Reduced.

"The losses in Minnesota could, if proper action were taken, be reduced to the European figure," declared Mr. Preus. "If this were done," he continued, "our losses in 1912 should have been $706,287 instead of $4,045,936. In other words, premiums paid out on such a basis might have been $6,558,468 instead of $9,884,617; that is, a saving of $3,326,131. Nothing short of a catastrophe in any one year could alter those figures and cause a greater loss, if the question of fire prevention were properly treated."

As to Fire Prevention.

Speaking of the importance of fire prevention provisions, Mr. Preus said, in part:

"The general public should be aroused to the situation which prevails in this state. There should be educational action in order that the people may be relieved from the tribute annually paid to fire, which they are at present forced to bear. It is argued that it is not the function of the fire insurance companies to prevent fire, but that their duty is simply to equalize the misfortunes to the public. In 1913 companies carrying approximately 90 per cent of the fire insurance of the country received $290,000,000 in premiums and expended but six millions, or 2 per cent for fire prevention purposes. Their expenses during the same year amounted to $120,000,000."

As pointed out by Mr. Preus, the people of the state are not expected to become interested in the question of reducing the fire losses until they can be shown that a direct financial gain to them will result.

Steps Being Taken.

As a step in the right direction towards adjusting the rates now being charged by fire insurance companies of the country, a special committee, consisting of nine commissioners of insurance, of which Commissioner Herman L. Ekern of Wisconsin is the chairman, and of which the commissioner of Minnesota is a member, has been charged by the National Convention of Insurance Commissioners with the duty of drafting a uniform measure for the supervision of rates making institutions. If deemed advisable, and the equalizing of fire insurance rates between individual properties warrants, and in order that the cost of protection may be regulated in regard to the supervision of rate-making institutions, may be enacted in the various states.

The next meeting of the committee will be held in New York City, Nov. 10.

SECOND VON KLEIN TRIAL

Main Witness Against Minneapolis Man Has Disappeared.

Portland, Ore.—Edmund B. C. von Klein, a Minneapolis man, has been on trial here for the second time for the alleged theft of $1,500 worth of diamonds from Ethel Newcomb, of San Francisco, who he is charged having duped into a fictitious marriage. The jury in the first trial disagreed.

Mrs. E. E. Wether of St. Louis, who asserted she lost $40,000 in diamonds through her acquaintance with Von Klein, is here to lend her support to the prosecution, but Miss Newcomb, the main witness against the prisoner, disappeared after the first trial and has not been located.

Careless Hunters Shoot Woman.

Minneapolis.—Mrs. Albert Cramer of Richfield was shot by careless hunters near her home. Two young men, said to have fired the shots, were arrested after a chase. Both were locked up in the county jail. They are the sons of James Harton and John Norberg, Mrs. Cramer will recover. Residents of Richfield declare that it has been unsafe for any of them to leave their homes since the hunting season began, due to the many hunters that infest the district.

Pipestone—Jens C. Predsted, who came to this country a few months ago, is in jail at Lake Benton awaiting the next session of the grand jury on a charge of having drawn a worthless check for $165.75 and cashed it at Lake Benton.

Crow Wing.—William Bisson, while loading his shotgun preparatory to going hunting, shot his little daughter, Victoria, age 10, in the ankle. He drove eight miles to Brainerd in three quarters of an hour to get medical assistance.

PROPER TREATMENT OF THE VEGETABLES

Let onions dry a day or two if the weather is favorable, and then gather and store them. The onion is one of the hardiest of garden plants and is grown nearly as a winter crop.

Not all vegetables require the same treatment, and it must be understood that the kind of storage that is good for one is fatal to another. Cabbages, parsnips, salsify and carrots are not injured by freezing. Irish potatoes, celery and apples will stand slight freezes, while sweet potatoes will be ruined even by a frost.

I have not often kept a great amount of vegetables in a cellar, and prefer the outdoor pits, especially for apples and celery and the vegetables that are not injured by free.ing. I have found it safe enough for two .ons of heads, pull the roots off by the root, bury in the trench and cover with dirt, and I have not bother'ed whether they are covered deep enough to keep out frost, as cabbage will thaw out again and not be injured, providing the thawing is within a certain time.

It should not be stored until quite severe weather, but if it was cold suddenly so as to freeze the heads solid, they could be stored at once and so that they may thaw out in the ground. Turnips, salsify and parsnips are benefited by freezing in the ground and turnips are not injured.

All these are stored similar to the cabbage, being piled in a conical heap and covered with dirt.

In order that they may be convenient to get at during the winter, cover the pile with straw or leaves, so that the ground will not freeze more than a few inches.

Irish potatoes should be heated in a moveable shed or bin, and not in a cellar under and on top, then covered with dirt, or, stored in the celler, they may be pulled down in one corner, as moisture does not hurt them, and they should be put in such a position as to be without freezing.

Apples are kept the same way as potatoes, and it adds to convenience in handling if the pit is kept dry by a moveable shed or bin.—Exchange.

Apples are much better kept this way, and they should be kept in cellar for immediate use.

Celery should be put down in moist earth whether in the cellar or pit.

By far the best method I have ever followed is to dig the banches, roots and all, and bank them on top of the ground in a single row, covering to a well drained spot in a heap two feet or less wide and as long as necessary.

Set the roots in contact with the moist earth and pack them together and pull the dirt around in such a way as to completely cover without getting any in the crown or the heart. Sufficient covering should be added to keep out the frost. Celery should not be stored until it is cold enough for the frost to get it right, and if banked in the fall to begin blanching before it is stored, a slight covering on top will protect it until late in November, when the ground freezes hard.

It will not thaw out in the ground, as celery, and be put in after it is cold freeze. If stored to the cellar it must be kept in the box or a barrel with the roots in contact with the moist earth, care being taken to keep the tops from wilting.

It is not a difficult matter to force celery during the winter, and for a properly done, people living near a good big market can make fine profit in this way.

Sweet potatoes must be dug before the first frost, about 60 days green being the ideal temperature.

It is also essential that they be kept dry, with a free circulation of air, and possibly the best building for keeping large quantities would be of brick or stone, heated by a furnace. Where a few are wanted for home use, a box or barrel of dry sand or road dust in a good place to keep them, and this should be kept in a room where the temperature is not allowed to get below 40 degrees; or may be in the cellar if kept up from the floor, and where there is a good circulation of air. Permanent pits walled with boards and covered with an open shed are excellent storage places for nearly all kinds of winter vegetables. I prefer them to the cellar for best results, especially with apples, celery and root crops.

REVIVE INTEREST IN AGRICULTURE

Young Men are Beginning to Think Twice Before Leaving Farms for the City.

(By R. B. BUCKHAM.)

It is especially pleasing with the older advocates of agricultural pursuits to note the increased interest which is being taken in these matters on every hand. Long have they preached, and long have they at length it is here.

Formerly the young men of the farms, generation after generation, assumed that of course they must leave the old homestead and plunge into the turmoil of the great cities, if they were to make anything of a success of life. Now they are thinking matters before adopting this course, especially since they see that their acquaintance who turned to agriculture, and to attended training in high science forging away ahead in life's battle. The city often many advantages, but he who supposes that it possesses a monopoly of them all is woefully mistaken. They are the in fact which is at length beginning to dawn upon the people of today.

There have been those who assumed that agricultural pursuits were humble and menial, but men of the broadest culture and attainment are seldom found who agree with them. Since the earliest ages, the greatest men have turned to pursuits of the close for their pleasures and recreations.

Plutarch says of Cato that although he was possessed of great wealth and high eminent, yet he much preferred agricultural pursuits to the forum, and enjoyed nothing better than to sit down to a dinner of boiled turnips which he himself had gathered and cooked with his own hands, while his wife prepared the bread for their humble meal.

Washington and Jefferson, our greatest presidents, were famous as born farmers, and loved the life of the country better than any other. Says the latter in one of his letters: "Cultivature of the earth are the most valuable citizens. They are the most vigorous, the most independent, the most virtuous, and the most tied to their country, and wedded to its interests and liberty, by the most lasting bonds."

And now at length the government, state and nation, has taken up the subject seriously, and undertaken to insure to the young practical instruction in this all important industry, by training and endowing schools for that purpose. Surely, the future of this science is rapidly brightening!

And after all, there is no more important problem presented us to be met and solved than how to feed the people of this rapidly developing country of ours. Scientific agriculture must evidently be the means, and it is safe to predict that it most certainly will.

Sow Alfalfa in Fall.

In many sections of the country the best time to sow alfalfa is in the fall. We remember this and have ground ready to start a patch this season.

Unprofitable Cow.

A cow that is underfed is never the most profitable.

If squashes are not carefully handled, the inside of the fruit is likely to crack, and by so doing allows germs to enter.

Keep Away From It.

Second growth kaffir corn is very often a source of killing to keep stock away from. It is frequently poisonous, especially if it has been injured by drouth or frost. Hydrogenoic acid develops in it and a small amount of that will kill a cow.

Watch the Pigs' Teeth.

Watch the litter carefully during the first few days and if the short, needle-like teeth pierce the sow's teats clip off the teeth with a pair of pinchers.

Items of Profit.

Two items to profit in stock are the early maturity and early maturity. In some degree the one helps the other, but in a considerable extent early maturity is a matter of feeding of the young stock. It is simply impossible to procure it if the animals are stunted while they are forming bone and muscle.

Winter Pasturage.

Silage is the dairy farmer's winter pasturage.

Corsage Rose Sets Off the Costume.

WITH soft lace drapery which forms their bodices, gowns for evening or for afternoon functions are completed by draped skirts meeting the bodice with a girdle or sash. Often the top of the skirt extends itself into the waist line drapery, and often a separate girdle in a contrasting color is employed.

But whatever the finish at the waist line, for these gowns for high occasions the splendid corsage rose is rarely left out. This is a rose made of ribbon or velvet, mounted with or without millinery foliage and having a ribbon-wrapped stem.

Such a rose is posed at the front of the gown, usually a little toward the left side and just under the bust. It is a splendid factor in the costume; it is in fact "featured," given the star part in the composition of the picture.

The roses of satin or velvet are made in all the fashionable new colors. Certain yellow and orange tints, green shades, also deep orange and red-violet tones are favorites. These corsage roses are floating—will trail form a plain skirt and dressy blouse into quite formal dress. They are large and are made of ribbon about three inches wide, or wider. The petalion is cut into lengths to form the petals, each length being twice that of required petal plus an inch extra for plaiting in at the base of the petal and winding in at the stem.

A wire provides the stem. A little ball of cotton is wound about one end, the size of a thimble, and over this a bit of ribbon is placed and fastened to the stem by winding it with a thread or tie-wire. About this center a short length of ribbon (folded lengthwise) is wrapped to imitate the small petals, still unopened, at the heart of the rose.

After the center has been made in this way, the petals are made. Each length is doubled and plaited in at the raw edges. The plaits are sewed from. After the petals—say ten or eleven in all—have been made, the bow with a girdle or sash. Often the top of the skirt extends itself into the waist line drapery, and often a separate girdle in a contrasting color is employed.

After the center has been made in this way, the petals are made. Each other development of the always present girdle shows silk in three colors laid in pleats between a three-cord girdle. Certain it is that, in the management of the sash, the great dressmodes are the most artistic, the most easy and graceful when tied to the side in the memory of the women of our country.

The study of a gown of es great artistic value as this one should involve that of the dressing of the hair and the arrangement of the coiffure, because both these matters should enter into the consideration of the effect and tume at any time. Satin slippers in shirt a little shimmering with silver and silk hosiery of the color of the gown take care of the extremities of the feet appropriately.

Velvet ribbons in one of these designs classified as the "cesque" are those which all the hair is waved. It is arranged over the head in a close mode. There is no chignon at the back. The ribbon ends are caught under the last waves and spread about in such a way as to disguise them well.

In cutting a gown of this character wide goods are more easily managed than narrower ones. The seam allowing of the front, while narrow, give room for easy handling because the front seam is not joined down to the bottom. The under petticoat must be soft; the most clinging of fabrics for it should be crepe de chine, or lace. An inserted flounce will take the place of a petticoat. Anything heavy enough to interfere with the fullness of the skirt is close and clinging lines would destroy an important item in the beauty of the design. It is the hang and not of of garments which is of paramount importance to the artistic and graceful distinction of say sort, without restraint, but in the lovely, natural silhouette, as glorified in ancient Greek statuary which really amount to cleverly arranged draperies which cling closely and shape the figure today; they must be shaped by the figure to be, so anyway. Hence so many gowns seem to be designed for the corvetisse figure.

During the velvet hat season, which is now with us, there is usually a wet cloth over it, and holding the iron upside down in the hands of the hat. When the entire surface is moist, hang the hat without touching it. When dry brush well, and it will look bright and new.

It may also be held over the steaming spout of a boiling kettle until moist. If the fingers come in contact with the wet nap, it will press it down and dry in that condition.

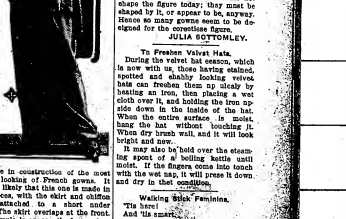
AFTERNOON GOWN A TRIUMPH OF FRENCH DESIGN



HERE is an unusual and attractive gown from the salon of a notable French designer. It has the grace of simplicity and it embodies several of the latest styles features of the present season. ON TO BEMIDJI.

The annual meeting of the Northern Minnesota Development Association will be held at Bemidji the birthplace, Dec. 4 and 5.

There ought to be a rousing and fully attended meeting, and it is none too early to begin an agitation that will result in having every county and so far as possible every community in Northern Minnesota represented there.

The N. M. D. A. has done splendid pioneer work. In the brief period of its history Northern Minnesota has awakened, has begun the work of actual development, and has set in motion an activity all along the line that will, ultimately, put to work every acre of the Fertile but none idle lands of this northern empire.

And to an incalculable degree, the credit for this awakening is due to the Northern Minnesota Development association.

But though the movement which it was created to make is well under way the work of the N. M. D. A. is by no means ended, nor are its possibilities for good exhausted or even diminished. Never, indeed, were they greater.

There is still a great work to be done, through the legislature and in other ways to systematize the state's handling of its public domain, to coordinate and direct also many state functions relating to this vastly important work, and to continue advertising to the world the rich opportunities Northern Minnesota offers to the homeseeker.

In the next legislature Northern Minnesota, thanks to the recent reapportionment which was the fundamental purpose of the association, the activity of the N. M. D. A. is needed to give effective and organized expression through the Northern Minnesota delegation to the needs and demands of this developing empire.

One thing alone among many that might be mentioned makes the work of this association a necessity to Northern Minnesota. The development still holds half a million acres of swamp land that will be patented to the state. It has been proposed through the Herald that this large area be given to the state with the express stipulation that the proceeds of its sale must be devoted to the creation of a state reclamation fund, the term "reclamation" as used to not only drainage but road-building and land-clearing; and that this fund be made the basis of a revolving fund with which to reclaim and put upon the market the state's enormous holdings in Northern Minnesota. This suggestion should be taken up at the Bemidji meeting and plans for definite action arranged.

Every county in northern Minnesota and every community so far as possible, should be represented at Bemidji by its best boosters and its best doubters. Northern Minnesota needs the N. D. A., and it should rally at Bemidji to give it a new and more vigorous impetus.

On to Bemidji—Duluth Herald.

Good morning. What is your intention—last?

J. J. Hill says there's too much watered stock on the market. Uncle Jim's railroad stock is now extra dry.

Republicans don always speak. Quite frequently the man who can afford a limousine drives a 1907 "one lunger"—and is his own engineer.

Enthusiastic boosters of big game are said to be big woods and sidewalk people are trying to keep out of range.

Most of the so-called "moral" plays are really immoral ones—Warren Bulletin.

Well? And what are the others?

Wm. H. Hurst has "fallen out" with the administration at Washington. For that and the defeat of how many the democrats have reason to be grateful.

Wm. H. Hurst has "fallen out" with the administration at Washington. For that and the defeat of how many the democrats have reason to be grateful.

With the loss from hog cholera in Minnesota placed at $5,000,000 by competent authority, Red Lake county farmers can feel that with no losses they are very fortunate.

Indian reunion, the editors say, that she will refuse to pay a tax on her income, said to be more than $100,000 a year, as a protest against the denial of the ballot to women. That's clever and the advertising is worth more than the newspaper story of the theft of enough jewels to fill a box car.

We are no doubt about it, here a complaint about double taxation, for with the new federal income tax and Minnesota's inheritance tax, can it not be said that a fellow gets it coming and going?

The Chatham distance tariff law is being condemned in advance—by those who are sure they are not going to like the effects of the operation of the law.

If the governor and state auditor desire to further demonstrate their approval of the economy program they might ride the bumpers.

The Northern Pacific railway is giving Crookston a park with cement sidewalks and other trimmings. Hurry up, Mr. N. P., with that up-town depot.

Many of the "strictly moral plays" and modern novels said to "teach a moral lesson" offer a continuous performance in the alluring pastime of trying to find just what is "bad" in them. And they draw "capacity houses" and become "best sellers."

Wow! Such a scandal! Give us a reform candidate! Governor Eberhart and Auditor Iverson have been touring the state (until the very last trip) in a club car without paying anything extra for the luxurious accommodations. Now, Mr. Reform Enthusiast, how they not been guilty of violating the anti-pass law?

Julius Schmahl, secretary of state, seems to be telling a good story when he says that Governor Eberhart and Auditor Iverson are playing "cheap politics" in refusing to ride in the club car provided for the State Drainage Commission and intend to stand choose the accommodations of the combination car of the "Jerkwater line." Mr. Schmahl's point is that heretofore the car has cost the state nothing extra, the railroads charging only regular fares and for berths for the members of the commission, and never before have the members been so unsophisticatedly democratic in their tastes.

Representative buttermakers have small faith in the dual-purpose cow. "James J. Hill and his talk of the so-called dual-purpose cow are the worst enemies the dairying industry of Minnesota has," said Mr. Sorenson, secretary of the Butter and Cheesemakers association. "The state of Minnesota," he continued, "has spent many thousands of dollars to produce this dual purpose cow and has made no progress. The Buttermakers' association has appropriated money to developing a special dairy cow and has made Minnesota known over the country as the "Bread and Butter State." We buttermakers are too busy counting our blue ribbons to seriously consider reducing the price Minnesota dairy cow to a nondescript."—Northfield News.

COADJUTORS' REMARKS.

Anoka News: The demand for low-priced automobiles is bringing out some peculiar designs. It is noted that the makers of standard cars manage to maintain the top prices for their products.

Wisdom Citizen: It is said that Ryan's "resignation" is made the candidate for governor on the Democratic ticket next year. There are a lot of votes more than Day that would be willing to lead the Democrats.

Baudette Region: Some of the young fellows in Baudette who are trying to drink all the booze in sight may be discouraged to learn that one brewery alone in Duluth bottles up 1,000 cases of beer every minute.

St. Cloud Journal-Press: W. R. McKenzie of the Northern Development association would like to be state senator from Beltrami county. Mac has always made good, and as a senator he would be a booster for Minnesota as well as some practical ideas on how to help the state grow.

Elk River Star-News: What do we with Frank Day is a problem the Democratic machine is having a good deal of trouble over. In the meantime Frank is conducting a newspaper that is carefully scanned by the politicians every time it comes out. He has a whole lot of memorandums that come from them to treat him with great courtesy.

Nashwauk Herald: If you do not like a town and are sure that it is going to retrograde the proper thing to do is to leave, but if you intend to live in the town, do all you can to boom it,to build it up and make it a desirable place to live. This is the way to be a booster and not by a long shot. My wife couldn't help today, and she can't forget it neither."

"Your wife?"

"Yes. I married the gal."

"I see."

"I dug a hole in the ground right there where Viv was shot, and we buried her, tenfoot. I had hot the dog a long while and was mighty fond of her, but I don't know as I mourned for her more than the gal she had killed. Though she hadn't been dead her for more than half an hour before I got mad.

"No, sir-ee: then galoots I killed don't trouble me, but the way I'm sore on when I was about to put a bullet into her is with me to this day."

The Look That Haunts Him

By HELEN STANLEY

"I've been obliged," said Sheriff Harker of New Mexico, "to kill a number of men in my day, and they was all of 'em the all freakest vittles you ever seen. Consequently I don't lay awake nights seein' 'em lookin' at me reproachful-like. There wasn't a one scarred one of 'em that wouldn't 'a' killed me if he'd got the drop on me first. But there was one killin' that I won't never git over."

"A man?"

"No."

"Not a woman or a child?"

"Not nary one, neither."

"Well, then, what was it?"

"I never was a good hand to begin at the wrong end of a yarn. If you're a mind to listen I'll tell you about it, but I don't want no interruptions".

"Go ahead."

"When I was sheriff of — county, Arizony, there was a good deal goin' on in the shape of cattle rustlin' and cases of pussons a-doin' of it. Some of 'em would stop and fight it out after a killin' or a robbery, and some of 'em would light out. Then as fit ont must be followed, and, seein' they often stole the best bosses there was to be had, it wasn't no easy job to catch 'em, I was a young feller then and as fond of a good hoss as any one. Besides, I had to have the best in reason down them thieves' and cutthroats. Another animal I needed was bloodhounds. I had three of the likeliest dogs you ever seen, but only one favorite. I called her other Queen Victoria. If ever a dog loved a man Vic loved me. Once when I got shot up by a road agent and was laid up for awhile she stayed right under the foot of my room holdin' wistful at every one that come out, as much as to say, 'Is he goin' to bond in the chips or not?' And when she'd ketch sight of me lyin' on the bed she'd most dreadful.

"One scarin' early I was wakened from my sleep by a most dismal howl. Rynders had broke into the house of a citizen and carried away his daughter, and a short distance from old. My body could tell which way he had gone, and the only way he could be tracked was by a hound. I mounted my horse immediate, and Vic she loped between Bonpnute—and, lettin' Vic loose, took her to the house where the outrage had been committed. She picked up the scent right away and struck off westward. I followed on hop.

"We ran along with her nose to the ground till she come to a creek, where she lost the scent, but picked it up on the other side some distance below, whereby I knew that Ryndert had been tryin' to throw us off by walkin' in water. We followed till night, when, come to a wooded place, I saw Rynders ahead. He had just come to a halt and was pickin' up wood to make a fire with. The gal was sittin' on the ground, lendin' a hand to the stick of a tree lookin' like a corpse. Vic saw 'em just as soon as I did and stopped stark still like a pointer on seein' game. I put my hand on her to quiet her, for I thought I might get a shot at the man before he knowed I was near. Vic didn't give me a chance. Nor did by splatterin'. Rynders turned like a flash, but not before I'd sent a bullet at him. The gal jumped to her feet, and Rynders darted behind her, the cowardly exact thinkin' to prevent my killin' him without killin' her.

"I was down and after him in a jiffy, but he was too quick for me to send Vic at him, and that's what I did. She made a bee line for him, and as she neared him I saw him draw a revolver to protect himself. He fired at the dog, and I saw her go about on three legs. She got her teeth into his side and held him to the ground, I not daring to fire from him. He fired agin at Vic, and I saw that he had disabled her, but I had a free shot at him, and he dropped him.

"I run down and tried to quiet the gal, who was hysterical, and partially unnerved. She was tryin', and but I knowed she was alive, for she was followin' me around with melancholy eyes.

"The dog served you." I said to the gal. 'If I hadn't hoss for her I wouldn't have tracked you.'

"Then the young woman to thinkin' chont the dog instead of herself, and she went an to Vic and petted her. Right was turned into gratitude.

"I called to Vic, but she could not come to me. A shot had struck her back and paralyzed her.

"'I'm sorry, miss,' I said, 'but the dog must be killed.'

"'Killed! Why so?'

"'I put her out of misery. She'll never move again.'

"The gal hust out cryin'. I wotted for her to compose herself, then got her to go behind a tree while I did the business. Vic saw me aim at her and knowed what I was goin' to do. She didn't like the idea any more by me to this day. My wife couldn't help today, and she can't forget it neither."

"Your wife?"

"Yes. I married the gal."

"I see."

"I dug a hole in the ground right there where Vic was shot, and we buried her, tenfoot. I hod hot the dog a long while and was mighty fond of her, but I don't know as I mourned for her more than the gal she had killed. Though she hadn't been dead her for more than half an hour before I got mad.

"No, sir-ee: then galoots I killed don't trouble me, but the way I'm sore on when I was about to put a bullet into her is with me to this day."

A Diplomatic Secret

By EDWIN D. TUCKER

Several gentlemen were discussing the affairs of Mexico, which were absorbing a great deal of attention, when one of them said:

"I have heard a curious story about Napoleon III.'s Mexican scheme repeated a number of times in different forms. I wonder which is correct."

"Do you refer," asked a white headed octogenarian, "to the case of how the czar bended off the French emperor?"

"I do."

"Well, then, I can give you the true version of that story, for I was directly connected with what occurred.

"I was very young at the time, but not too young to be connected with the American legation at the court of St. James. One evening-or a reception in a member of the British cabinet accosted me, though I had had no introduction to him, and after a preliminary conversation on ordinary topics drew me into a small room where we were alone and said to me:

"'You have been mentioned to me as a person fitted to be the recipient of an important diplomatic secret—indeed, to carry out an important diplomatic move.'

"He then pledged me to secrecy, impressing me with the importance of locking within myself what he was about to say to me, after which he proceeded:

"'Our good queen, with her usual sense and firmness, is in favor of permitting you Americans to settle your quarrels among yourselves. The emperor of the French, who must be constantly diverting the mind of the various factions he rules from himself, has some scheme with reference to making a lodgment somewhere in North America. He is importuning us to join him in intervention with a view to supersede the United States into two sections. We do not wish to antagonize him by a refusal, and we do not wish to enter into any arrangement with him which would divide the two states.

"'There is a power which would gladly block the emperor's game and did not know that the game was battling, to refer to Russia. The czar since the Crimean war does not love France. Russia does not love England. We cannot join Russia in a coalition to prevent intervention. Should the czar hear that we had been requested to induce us to join her in her proposed coalition he would take some steps measures to prevent it. This is exactly what we wish to do, but we cannot render a refusal of Napoleon's request needless and leave us to remain neutral in the affairs of states.

"'Diplomatic secrets sometimes look out without our being aware of where the task is located. You and I know exactly where this task is, and it must remain between you and me alone.'

"You except President Lincoln, of course?

"Of course I do not. There is but one person besides yourself who may know it.

"Mr. Seward?

"'No; the czar of Russia.'

"'The czar of Russia! I reach him?

"'That I must leave to you. Considering that you are a member of the American embassy here, it does not think you should have much trouble.'

Roller Feed Grinding Outfit

The new up-to-the-minute roller process of grinding feed saves you one-half of what it now costs you to feed your stock. Will grind more feed in the same power, as the best burr or stone mill ever made and does not heat the feed. Has great capacity, very simple, grinds fine or coarse, requires little power, has no burrs or other parts to be constantly wearing out, also grinds corn-meal and graham. Will last a life-time. Big money in custom grinding. The Roller Mill Way is the only way.

Why I Came to America

By JOSE HERRARA

"The reason why I came to America, my dear fellow," said one Spaniard to another, "is that I might get rid of friends who were liable to involve me in scarcelect plots that are honeycombing the social condition of my country. Whether they were working for something better than the present social status are right or whether they are wrong I don't pretend to say. What I do say is that I had no mind to be mixed up in their plans. Our opinions that came very near to be decided me to leave Spain.

"A friend of mine—we will call him Manuel, as I shall not give you the names of persons in the story I am about to tell—asked me to visit his summer home in the mountains lying directly south of Madrid. I accepted the invitation and found it a colony of summer homes. I met a number of charming persons, but I will mention only two, both of whom are connected with my story. I will call one Concha and the other Inez. Manuel, it seemed to me, was on the verge of forming a union, but with whom I could not tell. Concha was a gentle little thing with—so for as I could discover—no other desire but to love and be loved, and if married would devote herself to husband and children. Inez, on the contrary, was full of grand theories, a radical by nature, I understood from Manuel that she was a disciple of one who was attempting to found a new school of morals. I did not believe that she was sincere. It seemed to me that in everything she did she had a sinister motive. Perhaps, I sold to myself, she is attracted by the novelty of this man's ideas and deceives herself into the belief that it is sympathy with humanity that moves her.

"I was not long in discovering that these two girls were Manuel's good and evil genii. His heart when in a normal condition was with Concha, but he was influenced by Inez's views coming through Inez herself—that is. It was rather Inez than the views that moved him.

"Concha did not oringe my concern as to this influence that Inez was exerting over Manuel. Not the least jealousy did she show when she saw the two together, but at times I thought I could detect the glimmer of a hidden fire. One day I made a remark in Manuel when would say to him. If he chose to do so, to confide to me his relations to Inez that he had no loved Concha, but that Inez, who was intellectually very much Concha's superior, inspired him to do great things for humanity. This gave me the cue. Concha was influencing him in the way Inez in another.

"We all went back to Madrid together in the autumn, and one day Manuel stated that he was no active member of an anarchial society whose object was the elevation of the lower orders of humanity. He expected that in time poverty would be eliminated. He idea to confiding to me was to induce me to join his society. I told him that I preferred to live in an imperfect world rather than die to establish a perfect one. I knew that Inez had triumphed and Concha had been defeated.

"I kept away from him after that, for I feared he would become involved in some of those ruffical measures which thus for had been condemned by all but a small portion of the world's people and I preferred to keep myself so free from him that I would not suffer to case he got into trouble. It was well for me that I did, for one morning, looking out through a window, I could see excited crowds passing in the street and, having not asked one passing what had happened. He told me that a pronunciado movement had been killed by an anarchist. When a special issue of the newspapers came out what was my horror to see the name of my friend Manuel given as the assassin.

"Manuel was tried and executed. It was not long after his execution that Inez began to spend money in a way that she had never spent before. She she was also seen frequently at court, and a general in the army became attentive to her. Nevertheless she was not popular with persons of high degree with whom she was associating. I formed my own theory with regard to her, which was this: She had betrayed Manuel for money and his fortune.

"I wondered how Concha had taken her lover's death, but I was not one of her personal friends and did not feel justified in calling upon her at the time of her bereavement. I heard, however, that she was knew how she was affected by the tragedy.

"Another shock besides the assassination and Manuel's death awaited me. Taking up a newspaper one morning while at breakfast, I saw under large headline a statement that Inez had been stabbed in the carriage while returning to her home from the opera. She had been escorted to the carriage by an official high in favor at court, who had closed the door. On arriving at her home it was found that the lady had been stabbed to the heart.

"Inez's murderer was never found. Spain who knew—by inference—who had committed the crime. Fearing that the government might get a clew and I be summoned as a witness, I decided to get away as soon as possible. I left for this country the same evening.

"Thus for no clew to the assassin or Inez has been discovered. Concha, I have heard, has entered a convent."

THE HOME VOICE.

I would say to all: Use your gentlest voice at home. Watch it day by day as a pearl of great price, for it will be worth more to you in days to come than the best pearl bid in the sea. A kind voice is joy, like a lark's song, to a hearth at home. Train it to sweet tones now and it will keep in tune through life.—Chin Baruh.

PLUMMER

Despite the resolutions by the little boys' association to celebrate Hallowe'en in a more moderate manner,the morning after effects were similar to other years and the usual results were in evidence. There are several who profess the little boys were out guilty, but that the work was done by the older brothers who should know better. A little liberty is often taken to mean license.

Mrs. Charles Carpenter, for sixteen years a resident of Plummer and township, died last Sunday at the home of her son in Dorothy. The deceased was 67 years of age at the time of her death and was the mother of eleven children, 3 sons and 8 daughters. The funeral was held Tuesday from the Lambert Catholic church. Mrs. Carpenter, who for many years made her home with her son-in-law, Carpenter of this township left three years ago for western Canada where other children reside, leaving her husband here and at Dorothy six weeks ago.—Honeor.

LOSS FROM CHOLERA.

Estimate Is Compiled by Competent Authority and Is Not Exaggerated.

Different authorities have made various estimates of Minnesota's losses from cholera during the past few months. These estimates have ranged from a few million dollars up to $5,000,000. At present there is no practical way of making a very accurate estimate of the losses actually due to hog cholera. In figuring such a loss various factors must be taken into consideration to add-tion to the actual value of the hogs which died of the disease.

A photo weighing 50 pounds, dying from cholera, represents a loss of but a few dollars; but if the same photo had been properly protected by vaccination, grown to maturity and marketed, the hog-raiser would then have realized several times the value of the hog as a photo. Also, in reasoning holds true of a large number of young pigs that were sent to market many months before they would have been sent under ordinary conditions, due to the close proximity of the disease and the inability of their owners to secure the serum necessary for their protection. Which large loss was incurred both during July and August, and instead of returning the owners the ordinary market value, the months before may be reckoned with a figure much below the market price, on account of the fact that the hogs had been exposed to cholera, and some were probably infected and would be condemned when slaughtered.

In estimating hog cholera losses care should be taken to include only those hogs which actually died of the disease. Where cholera is in a neighborhood and a hog is taken sick the first thought is usually of cholera. Frequently when these cases have been investigated some other disease instead of cholera was found to be present.

Serum has been condemned in certain cases where vaccinated hogs have died, the owners claiming that the hogs had died of cholera, but on investigation it was found that in several cases the hogs had died from intestinal worms, and in others from lung worms. Other factors of lesser importance but bearing directly on the subject are the large amount of money invested in worthless medicines for preventing and curing the disease, the losses following the improper use of good serum and the use of worthless serum manufactured by irresponsible companies, the losses from chicken, both direct and indirect, will probably reach $5,000,000 this year.—H. Preston Hoskins, Assistant Veterinarian, University Farm, St. Paul, Minn.

"Kipper" and Red Herring.

The kipper is a split herring cured in smoke. The late Mr. John Woodger of Newcastle-on-Tyne and Yarmouth was the fortunate discoverer of this method of treating the herring. The process of producing the red herring is analogous to that of the kipper, the difference being in degree. The "red" variety is more thoroughly salted and smoke dried. The one advantage of this matted lies in the preservative quality thereby developed.—Westminster Gazette.

SYNOPSIS.

George Anderson and wife are a respectable working man and woman of Brooklyn. They have been arrested, charged with the murder of their employer, Mr. Challoner, whose body is found in the beautiful Allen mansion, which they have been engaged to clean during the absence of the family. The head manager declares there to be no doubt whatever of the guilt of the Andersons. Mr. Challoner was found dead in his bed, his head battered in with a hatchet, and the weapon was left standing in the wound. Anderson says that he found the body when he went to the house to work, and that he was terrified by the sight and ran away. Mrs. Anderson says that she was left in the kitchen while her husband went upstairs to do the cleaning. Both declare that they had no motive for the crime. Mr. Challoner was a widower, and the only members of the household at the time of the murder were the servants and the children. The latter were away at school. Mr. Challoner's will, which was found in his safe, left the bulk of his estate to his two daughters, Mrs. Stanley Brotherson, who evidently did not get on well with her father, and Miss Dorothy Challoner, who lived with him. Both daughters were married. The will also left a number of bequests to servants and others, and made a bequest to the Home for Aged Men. Mr. Challoner was a member of the Board of Directors of this institution. Anderson says that he was not aware of the contents of the will. Mr. Challoner's estate totals seven hundred thousand dollars. Mr. Challoner's son-in-law, Stanley Brotherson, while evidently sore and sad at the death of his father-in-law, is not overcome with grief. He tells the police and reporters that he has no idea who committed the crime. He declares that Anderson was a good servant, and that he was not aware that he was addicted to drink. He says that Mrs. Anderson was a good cook, and that she was honest. He thinks that the Andersons are innocent. Mr. Brotherson tells the reporters that Mr. Challoner was a man of many enemies, and that he had received many threatening letters. He says that he has no idea who wrote them. Mr. Challoner's daughter, Mrs. Brotherson, is prostrated with grief. She refuses to see reporters. Mr. Brotherson tells the police that his wife is unable to give any information. Mr. Brotherson says that Mr. Challoner was a man of strong prejudices, and that he had incurred the enmity of many people. He says that he has no idea who killed Mr. Challoner. Mr. Brotherson says that Mr. Challoner was a man of very regular habits, and that he was in the habit of retiring at ten o'clock every night

KING OF SIAM WANTS AN AMERICAN WIFE

KING OF SIAM AND ROYAL RELATIVES

KING IN ROYAL BARGE

KING IN MILITARY UNIFORM

KING IN TY-TA-TAY'S CHAMBER

SIAMESE WOMAN

RECENTLY returned visitor to the Orient is authority for the statement that the "King of Siam will marry no one but an American." This report is more flabbergasting than is at first remembered. When the young king—then crown prince—after his years of European education and American travel returned home to take up the serious study of his father's kingdom it was thought that as a matter of course he would follow the custom of the royal house to which he belonged and marry. But, greatly to the astonishment of the entire realm, this he flatly refused to do, and not even his father's kingly prestige could change his decision. Now, marriage by a Siamese monarch means not the simple taking of one wife, but the complicated and wholesome absorption of a hundred. His late majesty King Chulalongkorn had three wives when he was crown prince and added 97 others to his household before ascending the throne, and his father, the great Mongkut, claimed many hundreds of wives. So when young Prince Vajiravudh turned his back upon the beauties of the court and would have none of them he established a precedent of celibacy unheard of in his domain since "before time was."

There was never a suspicion of scandal connected with the prince, either while he was at Sandhurst or at Christ college, Oxford; nor during his many visits to Berlin, Paris, Madrid, Vienna or London—covering many years of his most impressionable age—not even a word dared his flying trip through the states and if he went back to his Asiatic throne leaving his heart love or to Europe the world has never come possessed of the matter nor has any particular caretaker been singled out as the possible happy custodian of the royal gift.

But, should this rumor have more than the usual value for credence—should his majesty, Maha Vajiravudh, the supreme ruler of all Siam, "marry an American"—but there! There is no royal family in this democratic country from which the young monarch could or should make his choice and by so doing cement the bonds that already hold his little kingdom in the sure and safe ties to Uncle Sam's heart. But there are American ladies a-plenty that are fair to look upon, rightminded and talented enough to rule monarch's queen, and if this be a culture quest as well as a longing of the heart—there could be no question of money in the affair, no bargain of gold for a title, for Siam is one of the richest of the little kingdoms of the world and her sovereign holds by the right of possession legal title to about everything worth having in the entire state—if this then be a quest of the royal gist, his majesty could make no better choice than one of the true American society, many of whose daughters are already serving in similar positions of trust and responsibility with the distinction and dignity, though as co-rulers over smaller principalities.

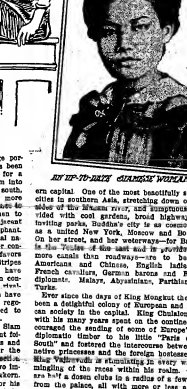
When the writer was a child he remembers being taken by the hand by King Mongkut's ravodha grandfather, and being led into the king's favorite reception chamber room. On the walls were rows of portraits of the presidents of the United States. They were not good likenesses—some of them—but they were the best his native artist could make from the photographs and other pictures his majesty had secured. They were all there, however, and in order, from Washington to the ruler at that time —Abraham Lincoln.

"I am very fond of America," said his majesty, as he closed the door, "very fond of it and some day we are to be united."

Was this a prophecy, that, uttered a half century ago, is to be fulfilled by the marriage of his grandson to an American?

Old King Mongkut pastorned his policy of "righteous rule" as closely after the principles found in the Declaration of Independence as he dared and remain on the throne of his father. His son, King Chulalongkorn, never ceased to lament that he was not permitted to carry out promised land of America. His multiplicity of wives and his desire to bring more Europeans with him on his official visit caused a coldness in Washington diplomatic circles that damped his ardor at the time—and he insisted upon his son making a special visit to the United States and personally meet the president of the great country of which your grandfather was so fond and which I have been unable to see."

There have always existed the most cordial relations between these two diametrically opposed governments—the most democratic and the most democratic. Siam has held to her Asiatic others; the descendant of a line of princes dating back to a time when Egypt was in her infancy and before Greece was born; he, the autocratics, the invincible, the divine master of the immortal souls, has played football at Rugby,



"friend" Siam into giving up a very large portion of her northeastern territory and has been watching for more than a half century for a fine opportunity to turn the entire kingdom over a French dependency; and England, on the south, is guarding her Malayan peninsula with one hand more skill and more hoping for her chance to squeeze her lighter into a hide and then to extricate her at the price of some of the adjacent land belonging to the lord of the white elephant. America stands at the door of Asia—between the two southern Asia has come nearest for centuries of direct or official annihilment for favors past, present or future. Her Stars and Stripes for the last three-quarter of a century have floated from the masthead of the American consulate unobtrusively amid all the vexatious wrangles for position and territorial gain which have obstinately come to the surface with great regularity—none of which have been referred to Uncle Sam's resident deputy for settlement.

So it would seem that if the king of Siam were to marry an American he would be but following his political and social predilections and would be retaining no link still closer than the bonds of friendship and real brotherly affection that have held through the reign of his two immediate forebears—Monakut and Chulalongkorn. But there is a better reason than this for the preference. Vajiravudh is not only a very independent but somewhat of a practical person, and from actual contact and mingling in the democratic state has arisen a large cultured contingent in Siam's capital, a community that needs a leader. And who can be these princes known with more dignity than the sovereign's queen!

But there is far more than all this that the "King of Siam" is looking for in the American wife—far more than even the leadership of the most cultured set in the kingdom. Vajiravudh has stupendous ideas for his country and its people, and already in less than two years since he set the crown of Siam upon his head he has had time to show of what stuff kings are made. The reported rebellion and reputed uprising of republicanism he halted with a word, the wishes of his late father in affairs of state and religion have been carried out; he has revised where revision seemed best and has made new where the old could no longer serve; he has chosen wise counsellors and has pressed many new ones into new positions; himself young, he has drawn about him the youth of the kingdom—the new minister at Washington, Prince Traidos Prabadh, is only thirty and, like his majesty, a graduate from an English university—and he has planned and put into execution seemingly impossible improvements, from the town to his statute books to the trivialities of everyday living. Altogether he is a personality to be watched; one upon whom already are focused the eyes of much the east and the west.

Vajiravudh is the first Asiatic ruler to have studied in western schools. Numberless Japanese and Chinese of high rank have been welcomed to the educational centers of Europe and America, but never before has a crown prince or budding emperor been sent to the west from the rough and ready westerner. Vajiravudh, the king of kings, head of the most ancient empire of the earth; he, who in his supreme rulership holds rights and privileges handed down from all crossed swords with the daredevils at Heidelberg, spurs in competition with the best of the youth of Britishers at Oxford.

This is the man who, according to rumor, is seeking an American wife to aid him in his rulership of Siam.

JEERED AT CANAL

De Lesseps Suez Plan Discouraged by England.

Later Great Britain Bought Control—Cost Egypt About $85,000,000 and the Britons Purchased Most of Her Interest.

New York.—When the Panama canal is opened with a flourish and a blare of trumpets in 1915 the second of the great dreams of Ferdinand de Lesseps, French engineer, will have become a fact, the New York Sun remarks. The first of the De Lesseps dreams has been an accomplished fact for almost fifty years—the Suez canal, upon the second dream he broke his reputation and his heart. After he had successfully dug the Suez canal De Lesseps tried to dig a canal in Panama and failed most disastrously.

But about the Suez canal it has been remarked that when the canal was finished France reaped the glory, England the main advantages and Egypt most of the bills. The idea of a canal across the isthmus was far from new when De Lesseps in 1854 obtained permission from the pashe of Egypt to form a company for the construction of the waterway. As early as 3250 B. C. there was a canal from one of the branches of the Nile to the Red sea. Seven hundred years later, when the sands of the desert had choked this first canal, Pharoah Necho set to work to build a new canal between Bubastis on the Nile and the Red sea. Necho failed to finish his canal, which was completed about 485 B. C. by another Egyptian ruler, Darius Hystaspis.

By the beginning of the Christian era this canal, too, had become unnavigable; it was neglected and restored by mistakenness in the course of Trajan's reign. The last restoration of the waterway was made in the seventh century by Amru, the Mohammedan conqueror of Egypt, who established water communication between Cairo and the Red sea. But then the desert sands drifted once more into the historic ditch and it was permitted to disappear.

As soon as De Lesseps had obtained permission to form a canal company execution of civil engineers of different nationalities explored the proposed route. Most of these engineers believed at first that he could build the canal for $40,000,000. Eventually it cost more than $90,000,000. The Egyptian government advanced a large sum as a loan, and later was prescribed for its stock subscriptions, and the stock was later sold in London. Where the British government finally was convinced that the canal was a success, was glad to gobble it up.

The pasha of Egypt had agreed, moreover, to supply 25,000 to 30,000 laborers to dig De Lesseps' canal for very low wages. The French company guaranteed these Egyptian workmen good food and sanitary care, and when they failed to provide it the pasha called off his men, and it was necessary to import laborers from Europe. The French company completed a branch of contract, permitted the Egyptians to accept Napoleon as a good administrator, and wrung about $20,000,000 more out of the haunted Egypt. Directly and indirectly the canal cost the loss of upwards about $85,550,000, and in order to get free of its financial difficulties Egypt turned over most of its interest in the canal to England.

Caruso Manages 20 Farms

Great Tenor Is Very Fond of Work and Fancies Himself an Art Connoisseur.

New York.—A letter from Italy has this to say of Caruso, the noted tenor, who is now in the United States:

"Caruso is not half as proud of his gifts as a singer as he is of his accomplishments as a gentleman farmer, and that he is a connoisseur of art, and a collector.

"The most extensive of his estates is that on Bellosguardo at Signa, with a charming outlook at Florence on the top of a hill, a magnificent park and gardens and a splendid villa.

At Bellosguardo, Caruso personally attends to more than 20 farms, yielding many tons of fruit and corn, and many thousands of gallons of Chianti wine. And woe betide the unlucky man who would utter the word margarine in the tenor's hearing.

Lately he has developed an acute passion for art, and he has been buying for years a large collection of works, ancient and modern, which are now accumulating in his houses. In a few spare rooms, but will soon find room in a very elaborate art gallery which Caruso is building on the finish of his house at Bellosguardo.

The art gallery is to be a long marble "portico" in the eighteenth century style, in the center of which the tenor will penetrate through the high-arched doorways. And in the middle of the gallery will be the statue of Caruso with the laurels bestowed on Caruso by admirers all over the world will be displayed.

A part of the statuary, however, will have to find a place in another of Caruso's country houses, which is situated six miles from Florence, at Castello Vecchio. This is called "Belvedere," and is surrounded by 16 farms, each containing a piano.

Caruso would thoroughly enjoy his holiday were he not pestered by a flood of begging letters. He also receives not a few blackmailing letters, almost all of which come to him from America. These he files most carefully, and he will eventually exhibit them to all his friends as a very remarkable collection of human documents.

Caruso now gets no less than $800 a night, and it is to be feared that to another $17 is all—but $800!

GIVES UP WORK; TOO FAT

The Restaurant Keeper's 370 Pounds Finally Won Him Admittance to a "Home."

Bristol, Tenn.—Too much flesh rendered Patrick Ryan, once a prosperous restaurant keeper in Bristol, practically helpless, retiring him from the business world and in 15 years reducing him to poverty.

The may not often happen to an individual in this strenuous American life, and especially to a man of energy and push, but in spite of all that he could do Ryan, who had made money, saw his business gradually get away from him on account of his ever-increasing burden of flesh, and after he was obliged to retire he sat in the street for years trading watches as a means of preventing too speedy loss of his weight.

Twenty years ago at the age of 30, he weighed 180 pounds and was a fine specimen of physical manhood. Gradually, in spite of dieting, his weight climbed to his weighed 370. He was then still able to attend to business, but his stockpoids continued to increase until it reached 200 pounds. Then he gave up the restaurant business and went on the streets and began trading watches. His feats continued to increase until he became physically helpless under a weight of 370 pounds.

"I have tried my utmost to keep up the struggle for a livelihood," he said, "but I am not fat and too much of breath. Somebody has got to take care of me if I am to go on."

Ryan has been admitted to an Institution in Richmond. His general health is as good as that of the average man of his age.

BACKED FISTS WITH SAVINGS

Young Chicago Boy Taps Bank Account to Bet He Can Lick Another Kid.

Chicago.—Pock's Bad Boy scores about to be regarded in fame by Shakespeare's bad boy, if the confidential tale which William Budd, eleven years old, 1113 East Forty-second street, told to Desk Sergeant Fitzgerald at the Forty-first street police station. The sergeant was gleaning over the blotter from the book-keeper at the desk and saw the husky form of young Budd standing there.

"Say," said Bill, "I want you to fix it up so I can go to the Willard school. They think I'm too bad over at the Shakespeare school. Maybe I'd have a chance to be good over there, they don't know."

"Got a reputation pretty quick, didn't you, for bein' bad?" asked the sergeant.

"School's been going only a week."

"Yep," answered the youngster. "Everybody over there a week. Yesterday I drew one dollar out of my bank account and bet it that I could lick him. My dad heard about it and he took me over to the bank and the dollar away from me. Then he licked me and I bet $17 in all."

"If that's the case," chuckled the police officer, "I guess you better go back to dad. He seems able to take care of you. Anyway, they don't allow us policemen to have much to say about public schools."

CENTENARIAN EAGER TO DIE

Wealthy Woman Will Only Smile When Talking of Funeral.

Geneva—The entire village of Cheldes, Switzerland, celebrated the 100th anniversary of the birth of Miss Elizabeth Bruner a few days ago, and everybody was glad to wish Miss Bruner

Despite the fact that her only family is deafness, and that she is friendless and lonely as any woman past middle age in the village, Miss Bruner is tired of life and mourns constantly because she does not die.

The villagers gave her an all pleasing lot of beauty and speeches were made. Miss Bruner declined to pay any attention, saying in bed and reading a book while her neighbors made merry. She is very wealthy, and the only sign of conversation that comes with a smile to her face is her funeral plans.

ENGLISH SENSE OF HUMOR

Their Slowness to See a Joke Again Demonstrated at Tea Party in Edinburgh.

The party was made up of three Americans, four Scotchwomen and one who was English, and they were having tea one rainy afternoon in Edinburgh, says the New York Times. One of the Americans had changed the subject of conversation from humor to golf. She had graciously agreed with the Englishwoman that it was quite too absurd to see how the Irish people were slow to see a joke. She had even, with an effect of perplexing herself, admitted that the Irish mind accepted light and frivolous spirit. But had been most agreeable, and then she began to talk on the ability with which the Scotch play golf in the rain.

"I have been in Edinburgh," she said, "for two weeks. It has rained every day for 18 days. The Brunts-field links look like a lake. And yet there are people playing golf there, and all the time I've been in Scotland—every one of the 22 days—I have seen men and women and children dried their balls over puddles. Does it make it better sport? Or do they like it as they can't miss a day, even when it's pouring?"

The Scotchwoman smiled, but one had an answer ready. And one of the other Americans permitted herself a light remark.

"I have a splendid idea," she said, "It's an invention. I'm going to make a fortune. I'm going to fence a golf stick that has an umbrella on the other end. You can hold one end over yourself and hit with the other. Isn't it great?"

The Scotchwoman laughed. The other Americans laughed. The Englishwoman looked puzzled for a moment, and then she leaned across the table, laid down her toast and spoke earnestly.

"Oh, but really," she said, "wouldn't that quite spoil the stroke."

EVIL SPOT IS CLEANED OUT

Sheriff Puts an End to Wycoming's Toughest Town—Inhabitants Arrested.

Cheyenne, Wyo.—Jack Pot, the toughest town in Wyoming, has been closed by the sheriff and mayor. Inhabitants are either under arrest or have been driven out of the country.

Jack Pot exists only during the summer months. It was a sort of half way place, where whisky was sold to cowboys and gambling carried on in the open. Inferior women usually found it a rendezvous.

The authorities confiscated several barrels of rather poor whisky, gambling devices and other paraphernalia and left a deputy sheriff behind to see that Jack Pot remained inhabited.

TRIAL OF MCKENZIE AND REOPEL

MEN ARRESTED IN RED LAKE FALLS HAVE HEARING AT CROOKSTON.

The hearings of Gordon McKenzie accused of absconding with $80 belonging to the Palace Hotel, a week ago, while on duty as day clerk there, and Ed. Riopel, who drove McKenzie to Red Lake Falls, and who is charged with aiding a criminal to escape, were on before Judge Guzman this morning. County Attorney Hagen appearing for the state, and W. H. Murphy for the defendants. The hearings were separate and at noon, by consent of the state and defense, the cases were adjourned till Nov. 18.

Sheriff Kelly and Chief Eck of this city were called, and testified to bringing the two back from Red Lake Falls, and Sheriff Charles Fellman and Chief of Police Orr, of Red Lake Falls, testified to the arrest of Riopel in a livery rig which he had hired there to take McKenzie to Plummer.

The defense called no witnesses today, but will have some, it is said, after the state has rested.

McKenzie, it is understood, had admitted that he took some money, but says the amount is not as large as claimed.

It is understood that D. McKinnon is not particularly anxious to push the case very hard. He had thought a great deal of McKenzie, and is decidedly grieved that he should have erred. Some investigation will be made regarding McKenzie's past and if the record is clear he may be treated with greater leniency by the authorities than would be the case if he has been tangled up in previous crooked deals.—Crookston Times.

ARRESTS FOR ILLEGAL VOTING

REPORTED ONE HUNDRED WARRANTS ARE TO BE ISSUED.

There was o well defined rumor current yesterday to the affect that the over busy city clerk is contemplating swearing warrants out for alleged illegal voting at the election last Tuesday. A call was made on the municipal judge for the purpose of determining if he had anticient quantity of blank warrants on hand to meet the emergency on the occasion. The genial judge beg just had a new supply printed and the clerk was informed that he could securely carry on the fight. It was thought that 100 would be sufficient; We believe they are now in the making and that service will soon be had.

It is greatly to be deplored that the local militia company has been disbanded, as it would have come in handy to have the members on deck to be sworn in as deputies to serve the papers, and it is it will probably keep the local police and brand-new city officers busy for some little time with such an influx of business.

Wh understand that the attorney general has been requested by the figurers of action of the law, and his views undoubtedly will be forthcoming on the ground to assist the county city attorney in the matter of prosecuting malefactors. Thief River Press News.

Bird Dogs.

Bird dogs have been known as such for only about three or four centuries. So far as we know, the dogs of North Umberland, sixteenth century, was the first mention of bird dogs. The duke was followed by others who trained dogs to "set" birds, but it was not till the beginning of the nineteenth century that any reliable record of a distinct breed of bird dogs can be found. The Gordon setter was founded by the Duke or Gordon about 1820.—New York Times.

Twice in the Same Place.

Some people seem to be more likely to be struck by lightning than others. Father Rocco of Turin was struck three times on different occasions. Mrs. Hale, an American woman who was wounded in the left foot by lightning in the year 1850, was struck again in the same spot in 1855. The great Mithridates was reputed to have been struck in the forehead while a child and to have had his sword fused by lightning as he slept with it by his side in later life.

UNCLE JERRY RETURNS
By M. QUAD
Copyright, 1913, by Associated Literary Press.

No man lived a more placid and contented life than Uncle Jerry Spooner of Spoonerville.

Uncle Jerry married a placid girl. It was not known that they ever differed in their opinions.

Just after being married Uncle Jerry began buying butter and eggs and shipping them to the city market. He made a bargain with a commission house that he was to get a certain price the year round. He therefore never had to worry about the state of the market. He shipped just so many eggs and just so much butter.

Uncle Jerry was a subscriber to and a reader of the Christian Brother. His grandfather had taken it, and his father had taken it, and he did not want to hurt the feelings of the editor by dropping it.

The Christian Brother had no current news. It seldom referred to the doings of local men. It never printed a fine about gold bricks or green goods or other confidence games. Uncle Jerry sometimes heard drummers and lightning rod men talking about such things, but he paid little attention. They said of him the day he was fifty years old:

"Why, he knows no more of the world than a hog! If a thief came he should come along he could bent Uncle Jerry out of his shirt!"

And just the next day the entire village was thrown into a state of consternation by the arrest of a city confidence man for working the green goods game in the hotel. Uncle Jerry was not on good man suddenly announced:

"Say, when he got, if I ain't going to the city!"

"Why—why—why—"

"Yes, sir, I am. I'm going up there to look around and see the sights."

His wife audibly corroborated this announcement and did not betray any astonishment. Indeed, the remark was one made for the house of the minister whose church Uncle Jerry attended.

"Uncle Jerry is going to the city next week," she stop him" was announced. "He probably has some business there," replied the good man.

"No, he hain't. He says he's just going to see the sights."

"Well?"

"Well, he mustn't go. He'll be robbed of his last cent the moment he's fore he has been there o day! Don't you know how green and innocent he is? Why, o boy five years old could gum guma him!"

The minister had o talk with Uncle Jerry, but it did not move the insistent one. He had took the stage to the seven miles to the railroad 500 people at Spoonerville to see him off, and two of them bet was anxious and worried.

Nothing happened to Uncle Jerry during the seven miles.

He had reached a hotel and eaten breakfast when standing at the door looking at the crowds when a pedestrian walked up to him with hand out and exclaimed:

"Why, bless me, if this isn't Uncle Jerry Spooner!"

"She he, sir, and right from Spoonerville, too!" was the reply as he took the hand.

"You remember me, don't you?"

"I do. You are Steve Taylor's brother, our dry goods man."

"Of course you remember me. I have lost my wallet and want the loan of $10. I will pay it back at each weeks and chalk as security till I see you again."

Uncle Jerry pulled out a roll of bills, handed over a ten and received a receipt. The man of the sale beck.

Two hours later, as Uncle Jerry wandered the streets, a man approached and threw a letter into his hand, and then disappeared. The letter contained a note about gold bricks or green goods or other confidence games. Uncle Jerry sometimes heard drummers and lightning rod men talking about such things, but he paid little attention. They said of him the day he was fifty years old:

He found the man of the sale in the office and said to him:

"Did he touch you for your wealth?"

"He did not. I touched he for more and got the watch."

"A harvest like you ought to have some one to walk out with you."

"Oh, I'm not complaining nay! I got the watch and then seem to be all bloomed in it!"

Within five minutes the right one was inspecting the gin. "Why, if it hain't a fine watch! Then you're a goner!"

"A hundred dollars, eh? Well, then it ain't so bad for a three dollar watch!"

The man looked at him as if struck sh-n, but instead of losing $20 he made $80.

They conned him into playing the races, and he made $40 in betting on the poorest horse.

Uncle Jerry returned home after a week, to be met at the railroad station by scam of Spoonerville, but when they asked him to get out of the postoffice and demanded that he relate his experiences all he said was:

"Folks, I'm glad to be home. I've seen enough pumpkin pies!"

A Discovery
By MARY L. BLACKISTON

One day a man stood in London beside one of those holes left for the use of persons who descend to the sewers. The place was in an unfrequented portion of the city, and there was no one near him. He looked about him and listened for a footfall, then producing a crowbar, inserted one end under the round metal cover of the hole and, lifting it, descended, permitting the cover to fall back into its place. Once in the sewer he drew from under his ragged coat a lantern.

John Murphy made his living by picking up articles that, having got into the sewer, were lost to their owners. Some he found on unlocks. It was covered with sewer coud, but was of silk with an embroidery curved handle. John was not the man to pass by such a thing. He said the man carried it as if it were tolerably heavy.

The landlord, pushed for rent forgetter, made up his mind that Walkley had taken more than his money about him, had followed him to the hotel and had taken the offending room purposely to rob him. The attempt to rob had resulted in murder. Walkley had pushed the body in his victim's loca sample case and had carried it down to the sewer. Whatever plunder he had acquired he certainly had not got the $500 that Russell had left with the landlord for safe keeping.

The matter was reported to the police, but the mystery was not solved, and the landlord was exposed by the inspector that Walkley had seen Russell leave the money from the bank. The landlord was directed that if Russell returned for his money to make the first known use of police efforts were made to trace Walkley. A backman was found who reported that a man in the street had hailed him early in the morning of the murder and asked to carry himself and an oblong trunk to a railway station. But the column reported that he had found the trunk on to his box beside his seat and that the mere weight more than twenty-five or thirty pounds.

About the time that the Walkley-Russell affair was being investigated Sidwood Hinton disappeared, leaving behind him a wife and three children. He stood his wife one morning presented to her that he was going never afterward seen by any one who knew him. Mrs. Hinton reported his disappearance to the police and had a thorough search made of the hospitals without finding any trace of him. The two mysteries were not thought of as having any connection with each other, but if they had and the date of Mr. Hinton's vanishing had been compared with that of the murder of the Russell affair it would have been found that on the morning that the dog Hinton disappeared Russell end Walkley put up at the Kentingmore hotel.

Three months after Hinton's disappearance his wife was summoned to a hospital where her husband had died. He did not appear to be seriously ill, and said that he did not know how he had come to be there. It seemed to be a case of loss of memory. He was taken home, each, and he seemed somewhat dazed for a few days, without going out and returned to his daily duties.

One day he went to the Kenzington hotel and asked to see the head interview with the landlord. Being directed together, he offered to tell the Russell-Walkley mystery on condition that no matter how great a secret. The landlord gave the required promise. And Mr. Hinton told:

"I am really innocent, but besides being Hinton I am Walkley. Russell was and is a woman. I became infatuated with her and for her deserted my wife and children. I determined to go away from them with her, but that we might not be traced we determined to disappear. To do so she personated a traveling salesman and took one of two adjoining rooms on your hotel. I followed; taking the other. Early in the morning she got into the sample trunk and I screwed the sheets with blood from a cut in my own hand. Then I carried her to the trunk downstairs, out and up the street to the railway station and out of the trunk. I then took it on again, called a cabman and was driven to a station. The woman followed and I met her."

Hinton remained for a few months, then quarreled. I settled a sum of money on her, she appeared to leave me and keep our secret. Then, desiring a return to my family, I invented the scheme of pretending to lose my memory."

Hinton convinced the landlord that the money deposited in the safe belonged to him, and the latter returned it. The secret has been kept until it is now told that it was the cause to the knowledge of Miss Russell.

Most Ancient Music.

The most ancient piece of English music in existence, "Summer is icumen in," is quite modern in comparison with a score of the "Greeks" of Egyptian dating from the fourth century B. C., which was exhibited at the International exhibition of music at Vienna some years ago. Even more ancient is the chant "The Blessing of the Priests" which was sung in the temple of Jerusalem before the captivity and is still in use in the Jewish synagogues in London.

The Walkley-Russell-Hinton Mystery

By HOWARD N. BRADFORD

"Prease, sir," said the chambermaid of the second floor of the Kensingmore hotel to the proprietor, "I can't get a reply from No. 43. The door is locked and the key inside."

The landlord remembered that No. 43 had been taken the night before by a James Walkley, a man with a bald head and sandien chop whiskers. He wished for the key, which communicated, but it had been taken by a small man, named Russell, who had come in only half an hour before Walkley and had given $500 in the hotel safe to be kept till removed.

The landlord went to No. 43 and was obliged to force the door. The room was empty, and the bed had not been slept in. He paused through the connecting door to the adjoining room. It, too, was empty, but the sheets of the bed were bloody.

Evidently Walkley had murdered Russell. But how had he got away with the body? Neither had been expelled. Russell was a traveling salesman, taking orders for linens. He had brought with him an oblong sample trunk about five feet length, so light that he had carried it to his room himself. A shopkeeper opposite who lived over his store and who was very early, on looking out of his front window, saw a man leaving the hotel carrying something that looked like a large, low trunk on a truck drawn by his burden. He said the man carried it as if it were tolerably heavy.

The landlord, pushed for rent forgetter, made up his mind that Walkley had taken more than his money about him, had followed him to the hotel and had taken the offending room purposely to rob him. The attempt to rob had resulted in murder. Walkley had pushed the body in his victim's loca sample case and had carried it down to the sewer. The most ancient piece of English music in existence, "Summer is icumen in," is quite modern in comparison with a score of the "Greeks" of Egyptian dating from the fourth century B. C., which was exhibited at the International exhibition of music at Vienna some years ago. Even more ancient is the chant "The Blessing of the Priests" which was sung in the temple of Jerusalem before the captivity and is still in use in the Jewish synagogues in London.

READ THE ORDINANCE

Provides Rules for the Regulation and Use of the City Water Works.

The city ordinance regulating and prescribing the management and use of the system of water works in the city of Red Lake Falls is published in today's paper, and by its publication the last of the formalities making it one of the "laws" of the city has been complied with.

Because eventually practically every property owner in the city will be a user of city water it is urged that everybody read the ordinance and it might be well to file this copy of the paper for future reference.

ED. RIOPELLE BOUND OVER

HELD UNDER $500 BONDS CHARGED WITH AIDING CRIMINAL TO ESCAPE.

This morning before Judge Boerner at the conclusion of the hearing of Ed. Riopel, charged with aiding a criminal to escape, he having driven Gordon McKenzie, former clerk at the Palace, to Red Lake Falls when he was accused of absconding with $80 of money in his charge, Riopel was held to the grand jury under $500 bonds. He was given into the custody of the sheriff and a endeavoring to secure bondsmen this afternoon. — Crookston Times, Tuesday.

GO SLOW ON BRIDGE.

The bridge over the Clearwater river is unsafe for fast driving and automobile drivers are instructed that they must not go over the bridge faster than six miles per hour. The fast driving must be stopped at once or the bridge will be condemned.

R. H. O'DONALD,
Civil Engineer.

Dr. Campbell Honored.

The Grand Forks Herald announces that Dr. R. D. Campbell, the Grand Forks surgeon, well known in this city, has been made a charter member of the American College of Surgeons, an association which was organized at the meeting of the clinic congress held in Chicago last week.

CROOKSTON MAN DEAD; AUTO ACCIDENT

WAS PINNED UNDER MACHINE WHEN CAR WENT INTO THE DITCH.

Shortly before midnight last night Leo Medved, while returning from the Fisher, was instantly killed when his automobile went into the big ditch four miles southwest of the city, turning once and a half over, and Charley Sunderland, a passenger in the car, only escaped with his life because Jess Rasmussen and his wife happened to be close to the scene of the accident, in a buggy, and hearing Sunderland's cries for help, rushed to the rescue, Mr. Rasmussen holding Sunderland's head above water till help arrived.

Messrs. Medved and Sunderland and driven to Fisher some time after supper.

As they reached the big ditch Medved started to turn south on the road which runs alongside the ditch and on the west side. He turned just enough to miss the bridge and went up over the highway and down into the ditch, the machine turning once and a half over and landing on its side, with Medved pinioned directly beneath the front portion of it, while Sunderland was caught under the rear end. There was a foot and a half of water in the middle of the ditch, Medved being pretty practically all under water, while Sunderland's body was nearly all submerged, he being able to keep the nostrils and mouth above water by bending his head back.

Mr. and Mrs. Jess Rasmussen were returning home from Crookston. As they neared the bridge they saw the auto headlights and stopped before crossing the bridge, thinking they could let the auto pass before they crossed, to avoid accidents on the bridge. When they saw the auto start to turn on the road leading south, Mr. Rasmussen drove across the bridge. Mrs. Rasmussen watched the auto and saw it disappear.

"They must have gone into the ditch," she said to her husband. "No, I think they headed south on the road all right," responded her husband, but he stopped his team and as he did so both heard the frantic shrieks of Sunderland for help.

Mr. Rasmussen ran in the aid of Sunderland and held his head out of the water, but was unable to extricate him from under the machine. Rasmussen then directed his wife to drive rapidly to the Slater home, but a half mile south, and get help. She returned in a few minutes with Mr. Slater and his two sons, and Sunderland was pulled from the water, and the body of Medved was then extricated, with some difficulty.

Sunderland, while not seriously hurt, was badly bruised, and the nails in the leg water was a shock of itself. He was rushed to the Slater home where dry clothing was secured, after which he was brought to the city.

Sunderland says the accident happened so quickly that he can't tell how it did happen. He says they were not running fast, and seemed to see subsinistrates this statement. Medved started to turn the machine on the south road and said, "I can't steer it." That was all he had a chance to say before the machine went over in the embankment and plunged to the bottom of the ditch.

The machine was not damaged at all, aside from a broken windshield and one bent lamp.—Crookston Times, Tuesday.

ANNUAL MEETING OF FAIR STOCKHOLDERS

RED LAKE COUNTY AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY ELECTION DEC. 2.

The annual meeting of the stockholders of the Red Lake County Agricultural society is to be held in the Riverside Club rooms in Red Lake Falls, Tuesday, Dec. 2, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

This meeting is the most important one of the year for the stockholders of the society. Four directors are to be elected and other important business is to be transacted. The new officers of the society are to be chosen by the directors at a meeting to be held after the new directors take their offices.

"HELLO OOC," SAYS CORPSE.

Kittson County Man Supposed to Is Dead is Very Much Alive.

The coroner of Kittson county is not in the habit of shaking hands with cliffs but that is what he did Monday after he had been summoned to the home of August Landner, owner of about 800 acres of land seven miles out of Hallock. He was telephoned to come out at once as Landner had died suddenly. He went post haste in an automobile and when he arrived and entered the house hurriedly he found all the relatives assembled.

When he entered the room Landner sat up in bed and extending his hand remarked, "Hello. Doc, old socks, how are you."

For an moment the breath of the coroner came in short gasps, but he finally gathered himself together, congratulated Landner on his livelihood he displayed for a dead man, and betook himself back to Hallock and countermanded the order for a casket.

Landner had been taken suddenly ill and went off into some kind of a fit, and his relatives thinking he was dead, and after the coroner had been sent for he revived.—Crookston Times.

PROTECTING FUR BEARING ANIMALS

SEVERAL ARRESTS—A CLERGYMAN AMONG THE VIOLATORS OF GAME LAWS.

A report from Crookston regarding the enforcement of the law for the protection of fur-bearing animals is as follows:

"Strict enforcement of the state game law regarding the killing of fur-bearing animals has resulted in the convicting and fining to the amount of $19 each of four of the North Dakota, among whom is a clergyman, Rev. Adolph Steinlund of Leonard. The others are Louis Erickson, Fred Erickson, Sebert of St. Hilaire and Frank Schmidt of Red Lake county. Thomas Wanless Mundwiller pronounced these convictions, has found that while four years ago it would have been hard to discover beaver, there are at present probably 400 in Lake Jessie, where four obtained in Canada were placed, and they are moving into tributary waters.

"The season for beaver is closed the year round now. When it is again opened the trapping of fur-bearing animals will afford a means of subsistence for settlers whom they are clearing and planting their lands."

LOUIS ERIC ERICSON.

Well Known Business Man Died Following Operation.

Red Lake Falls people were surprised and shocked when advised of the death of L. E. Ericson, for only a little more than a week previous to his death he had been attending to his business in Red Lake Falls and seemed to be enjoying his usual health.

Mr. Ericson went to Minneapolis on Friday, Nov. 7, for hospital treatment and last Friday he underwent an operation. He withstood the shock of the operation well, but his physical condition was such that he gradually weaker and passed away on Saturday. Mrs. Ericson and the other members of the family were with him in Minneapolis and came to Red Lake Falls with the remains on Monday.

Louis Eric Ericson was born in Sweden June 4, 1849. He and Miss Annie Merie Stoffenson were married in Sweden July 4, 1875. Eight children were born to them, four sons and four daughters, three sons and one daughter having died in childhood.

Mr. Ericson and family came to this country in 1886 residing first in Minneapolis, where they remained seven years. From there they went to Arlington, where they lived ten years. In 1902 he and his family came to Red Lake Falls and had since resided here.

Mr. Ericson was a member of the Swedish Lutheran church and also a member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen. He was a leader by trade and was engaged in that business during his residence in Red Lake Falls. He was a man of unquestioned integrity who won many friends to whom the announcement of death has brought sorrow and who sympathize with the family in their bereavement.

The four children are Mrs. Erickson, three daughters, Mrs. J. M. Schram of Ray, N. Dak., Miss Alice Ericson, a graduate of the Red Lake public schools, and Miss Helen, a sophomore in the high school, and one son, Walter Ericson, teller of the Merchants State Bank. There are two grand children, children of Mrs. Schram, two daughters and two sisters. One brother and a sister reside in Sweden. One sister, Mrs. John Johnson, lives in Duluth, and one brother, John Ericson, resides in Tacoma, Washington.

The funeral was held at the Presbyterian church at two o'clock Tuesday afternoon, Rev. David V. Richardson officiating. The hour of the funeral the business places of the city were closed.

LINCOLN'S GETTYSBURG ADDRESS.

Delivered on the Battle Field 19, 1863—50 Years Ago.

"Four score and seven years ago our fathers brought forth on this continent a new nation, conceived in liberty and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal.

"Now we are engaged in a great civil war, testing whether that nation or any nation, so dedicated, can long endure. We are met on a great battle-field of that war. We have come to dedicate a portion of that field as a final resting place for those who here gave their lives that that nation might live. It is altogether fitting and proper that we should do this.

"But, in a larger sense, we cannot dedicate, we cannot consecrate—we cannot hallow this ground. The brave men, living and dead, who struggled here have consecrated it, far above our power to add or to detract. The world will little note nor long remember what we say here, but it can never forget what they did here. It is for us, the living, rather, to be dedicated here to the unfinished work which they who fought here have thus far so nobly advanced. It is rather for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before us—that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they gave the last full measure of devotion—that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain—that this nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom—and that government of the people, by the people, for the people, shall not perish from the earth."

RIVER UNSAFE AGAIN

Boys Should Not Go on Ice Until After Another Heavy Freeze.

The warm weather of the past few days has made the ice on the Clearwater river unsafe and a trap for small boys. Though ice three or four inches thick has formed on the river, there are now some open spots. Though it seems to be safe in places it is not, and boys combined, making it impossible to locate the dangerous places.

Before the construction of the dam the river was not the dangerous place for small boys that it now is. Was the water much deeper and of varying depth, high a part of the day and lower at other times, and for the boys safe to support weight because of the varying depth of the water, the ice will be a good place for the boys to stay away from until a heavy freeze has caused a coating of strong, clear ice to form on the river.

LAWLER'S MOVE IS BIG SURPRISE

NO EXPLANATION FOR EARLY FILING OF GOVERNORSHIP FIGHT.

St. Paul—(Special)—Not to be outdone by Governor Eberhart in the side of the house the state Democracy has awakened and offers Daniel W. Lawler as a gubernatorial sacrifice. Mr. Lawler, ale mayor of St. Paul, in 1912 Democratic candidate against Knute Nelson for the governorship, and last fall a candidate for United States senator with the same Knute Nelson as his rival, put up $10 with Secretary of State Schmahl as required under the state primary law and is now a full fledged candidate. "Dan," as the boys down here call him, is the first candidate to file for any office in the gift of the state. Always erratic, and that in the fullest sense of the word, and yet giving every evidence of a connection that spells organization, Mr. Lawler's entrance into the ship game is unexplainable at this time. Some, during the whole thing spells trouble, with F. S. Lynch, national Democratic committeeman from Minnesota, the man whose scalp is wanted, and R. T. O'Connor, the Democratic boss of St. Paul, the active man behind the scenes. There can be no reason for any office in the gift of the state. Always erratic, and that in the fullest sense of the word, and yet giving every evidence of a connection that spells organization, Mr. Lawler's entrance into the ship game is unexplainable at this time. Some, during the whole thing spells trouble, with F. S. Lynch, national Democratic committeeman from Minnesota, the man whose scalp is wanted, and R. T. O'Connor, the Democratic boss of St. Paul, the active man behind the scenes. There can be no reason for any office in the gift of the state. O'Connor, the Democratic boss of St. Paul, the active man behind the scenes. There can be no reason for any office in the gift of the state.

Mr. Lawler is credited with a desire to succeed United States Senator Attorney Houpt of the Minnesota district, and inasmuch as National Committeeman Lynch will undoubtedly name his successor the gossip in some quarters has been that Mr. Lawler's candidacy is for the purpose of forcing the big fellow's hand. Following the filing of Mr. Lawler's candidacy National Committeeman Lynch was seen, but if he thought such or even knew anything he failed to show it. He was only smiled and said that if Dan had filed he had simply exercised a privilege that was open to everybody. As to any scheme of embarrassment for Representative Fleming, the latest gubernatorial possibilities are said to have the backing of Mr. Lynch and others high in the Democratic circles. Mr. Lynch was seen at every turn by the newspaper gossip aside, Mr. Lawler's filing at the gubernatorial game is going to make trouble in the Democratic camp. Dan comes trouble at every pore and I can say that he does look for it. Being a seeking there will be something doing all the time. When mayor of St. Paul he put the Democratic organization on the shelf, and it is still there. When he ran for governor in 1852 Knute Nelson, his Republican rival, had a walkaway and when in 1912 he jumped the party and joined forces with the Progressive Democratic organization he carried with him quite a few regular votes. The speculator has been busy history ever since he has done prominent politically and the unusual is still his chief feature.

The gubernatorial campaign on the Republican side in the house will be said to have opened this week when Governor Eberhart and State Auditor Iverson, as members of the state drainage commission, started on their annual tour of inspection of the ditches completed and in course of construction in the northern part of the state. With the work of inspection they combined the idea of doing a few fences and incidentally feeling out the natives along the way. The two kept close watch of each other and nevertheless no bets in a vote getting way. It was a rough trip, and the governor has not neither grumbled. Who had the best of it, Governor Eberhart or Auditor Iverson, it is impossible to say at this time. Next primary day will tell.

The man who says the state is doing nothing to reclaim the cut-over lands in Northern Minnesota does not know what he is talking about. The state through the efforts of Governor Eberhart and his party opened the eyes of some of the skeptics. In Roseau county alone nearly 100,000 acres of cut-over lands have been reclaimed and soon will be on the market. Ditches extending for miles have been constructed with a road and extending its entire length. Governor Eberhart and State Auditor Iverson were told that interesting settlers stood ready to take the entire acreage reclaimed the moment it was placed on the market.

PUBLIC MAY USE CITY WATER

FLOWING WATER AT ALL TIMES AT TWO PLACES IN THE CITY.

Owing to the lateness of the season when the system of waterworks was completed in the city, only a limited number of property owners have taken the water into their premises. Because of this fact the city officials decided upon a plan that would make it possible for many people to have the use of the water.

At two points in the city there will be flowing water continually. One flow will be on Main street on the Skiff land and the other flow on Broadway, on the east side, near the Adler residence, and to these two places everybody is invited to come and "drink freely"—and fill his pail.

It was decided to have flowing water at these public places at least as a preventive of freezing and to keep the supply of water in the mains fresh.

YOUNG MAN MYSTERIOUSLY DISAPPEARS

NO ONE SEEMS TO KNOW WHERE LOUIS PHILION MAY BE.

Louis Phillion, a Red Lake Falls young man, employed by the Great Northern Railway company as agent at Lockhart, has mysteriously disappeared and no one seems to have any definite information as to where he may be at the present time.

Detectives have been on the case several days going over his accounts looking for some indication of a motive for his sudden disappearance, and conducting a systematic search in an endeavor to locate him.

Just before his disappearance he made a brief visit to his home here. In connection with his visit here there is a report of an attempt to hold some other people to an accountability for his present situation. The report, however, is of age and it is said that while here he was supplied with liquor and that the people who are alleged to have supplied the liquor are to be required to answer for the alleged law violation. Before he left here he may he in this report cannot be stated until the truth is known.

The young man is well liked in his home town and his unfortunate situation causes much regret to his friends. It is expected a trying for the members of his family. There is little doubt that, with a systematic search being conducted, he will be located soon.

BOY BADLY INJURED.

Fell from Rig and Was Dragged for a Mile.

Saturday evening Dr. Gambell was called to the Henry Erickson farm 10 miles east of Middle River to attend Andrew Erickson. The two Erickson boys Andrew, aged 15 and Cornelius, aged 17, had been to Middle River during the day and while there had imbibed too freely and when they started home were under the influence of liquor. When about a mile from Home Andrew, the younger brother fell from the rig and when falling, his legs became entangled in the lines, dragging the boy the rest of the way home. The older boy was so intoxicated that he did not know his younger brother had fallen out. The younger boy was so badly injured that there is little hope entertained for his recovery. The boy was taken to the St. Vincent hospital at Crookston on Monday evening where he will receive the very best of attention. He was accompanied by Dr. Gambell from this city. The father of the unfortunate boy was not at home when the accident occurred, being in St. Paul on business matters. His home was accompanied with and left Sunday morning for his home. Every effort will be made to find out the guilty party that robbed the young lads the liquor and no doubt they will be prosecuted to the full extent of the law. —Thief River Falls Times.

WINS COVETED PRIZE

Former Tervehoume Man Gets High Score in State Cheese Scoring Contest.

Joseph Parenteau, the former Tervehoume man who during his residence here and since has won many honors in cheese scoring contests,has again won high honor.

Mr. Parenteau now conducts a cheese factory at Morrisville, Minn., and has participated in the educational butter and cheese scoring contests conducted by the state dairy and food department. The contests were scored each month for the season just closed and Mr. Parenteau gets the high average, 95 3-6, and the first prize for the season.

The honor was worth striving for and Mr. Parenteau's friends in Red Lake county will be glad to know that he is continuing his good work.

THREE SCORE MAY HAVE BEEN KILLED

DEATH TOLL OF DISASTROUS GALE ON GREAT LAKES GROWS STEADILY.

PROPERTY LOSS OF MILLIONS

Details Yet Lacking But Much Is Known—Unknown Craft Lies Bottom Up in Lake Huron—List of Fatalities.

Chicago, Nov. 12.—The shores of Lakes Superior, Huron and Erie are strewn with the wreckage of a three-days gale and snow storm which cost the lives of probably three score persons, turned bottom up in mid-lake a 200-foot steel vessel with its crew, wrecked or grounded numerous other craft and caused a property loss which will run into the millions.

Details Just Now Known.

The details of the storm, which literally swept from the westernmost end of Lake Superior to the eastern shore of Lake Erie became known only when survivors began arriving in ports with tales of hardships and heroic rescues seldom equalled on the lakes.

On land, the storm hit hardest at Cleveland, where 21 inches of snow fell, where five persons were killed and ten others lost, and where $2,000,000 damage was caused to property, chiefly telephone and telegraph systems, thus keeping that city out of direct communication for two days.

Toll is Large.

The death toll, with many ports unreported, is told thus:

Twenty-five or 40 men probably drowned in the overturning of a freighter found floating in Lake Huron.

Five bodies washed ashore at St. Joseph, on the Canadian side of Lake Huron four having been marked "worked" and one a belt marked "Racine").

Three bodies washed ashore opposite the position of the overturned boat.

Six members of the lightship drowned in Lake Erie, near Buffalo, N. Y.

Escapes Are Numerous.

The escapes from death were numerous. After the storm, about Friday midnight, had blown away the upper part of the ship, Capt. J. W. Duddleson of the steamer L. C. Waldo, navigated by a small, lowcurrate compass and the aid of a lantern held by a sailor, lo the stern of the vessel, by himself and crew to a reef, where the crew, on leading, suffered intensely cold and hunger until their rescue.

The crew of the Turret Chief, when the ship struck the rocks in Lake Superior, were forced to go ashore scantily clad. But it had to be taken from them the hillcard.

It was impossible to estimate the loss to vessels wrecked or damaged by grounding. Shipowners in Detroit estimated the loss in Lake Huron and the Detroit and St. Clair rivers alone to be several hundred thousand dollars. Three of the wrecked steamers increase the loss by $500,000, while the scores of smaller craft driven ashore in Lake Superior and Lake Erie will send the total much higher.

The vessels reported aground with slight or no damage, number about 30.

FIRM USED SIMILAR LABEL

Seattle Firm is Enjoined From Imitating Trade Idea of Rival Medicine Firm.

Seattle, Nov. 12.—Judge Jeremiah Neter of the United States district court, has granted a permanent injunction in behalf of the Centaur company of New York, the manufacturers of Fletcher's Castoria, against the Stewart & Holmes Drug company of this city.

The defendant company is one of the oldest and largest concerns of its kind in the Northwest.

The controversy arose from the similarity of the labels of the well known preparation and from the evidence filed in the case, it was shown that the infringing label was first discovered on sale in Honolulu and was traced to its origin in Seattle.

Vessel is Again a Rescuer.

Queenstown, Nov. 12.—The steamer Rappahannock, on the Canadian route which aided the Volturno when she was burning, brought into port the steamship South Point, bound from Philadelphia for London. The South Point's engines were crippled in a terrific storm on Nov. 4. She sent out a wireless call for help and the Rappahannock picked her up the next day.

"Northern Queen" in Peril.

Port Huron, Mich., Nov. 12.—According to messages received from the Canadian shore of Lake Huron, several bodies had been washed ashore at Kettle Point and a ship, grounded far out from the point, is being pounded to pieces by the waves. Seven other bodies, it was reported, are seen floating about the decks of the stranded vessel. Only a part of the boat's name could be made out, that being the one word, "Queen." The Northern Queen has not been accounted for since.

Dies While at Prayer.

New York, Nov. 12.—Regarding the day in prayer as she had always done, Hannah Morgan, a seamstress, 50 years old, was stricken with paralysis while kneeling to a pew in the Church of St. John the Baptist. Many worshippers and the priests of the church saw the woman in prolonged meditation but it was not until after the services that any one sought to investigate the cause of her long prayer. Then it was discovered that she had suffered a stroke, was faint with hunger and unable to rise.

MEXICAN PROGRAM IS KEPT A SECRET

RUMOR HAS IT, HOWEVER, THAT U. S. MAY REMOVE ARMS EMBARGO.

HUERTA IS URGED TO RESIGN

Porfirio Diaz, Former Ruler, Advises Present One That Elimination Is Patriotic Duty.

Mexico City, Nov. 12.—The acute stage of Mexico's economic situation was manifested in a long cooltiqued rue on the banks and served to accentuate the fears of the Mexican people. This, combined with reports of military operations in different parts of the country, appears to have distracted the public mind for the moment from the possible dangers in the strained relations with the United States. In the legation and among the otter b loformed business class there is anxiety over the situation.

Diaz Advises Resignation.

Paris—Gcoorol Porfirio Diaz has advised Gcoorol Victoriano Huerta to resign from the presidency of Mexico. Two friends of Gcnaral Diaz, each acting separately and by authority tlio of the ex-president, sent telegrams to Gcoorol Huerta last week, telling Hoerta he should act at once.

Secrecy as to Program.

Washington. — After conferring many hours on the Mexico problem, close friends of the president say that he is likely to make no embargo announce in favor of Carranza and the rebels within a few hours. At the White House and also,at the state department, the utmost secrecy is maintained on the president's program.

Story of Suffering.

New York.—The hardships of more than 210 women and children who fled from Torreon to Monterey are described by Mr. Fletcher, a lumber merchant of Torreon.

The 320-mile trip, Mr. Fletcher said, required five weeks and on the train there was intense suffering. Several children died from .lack of cooriihisment.

ANOTHER WILSON ROMANCE

Rumored That Next White House Bride May Be Daughter of President.

Washington, Nov. 12.—Society is much interested in a report that another romance may spring out of the wedding of Miss Jessie Wilson to Francis B. Sayre, Jr. Miss Helen Bones, one of the ushers, has been a frequent visitor at the executive house parties at the White House and it has been paid marked attehtion to Miss Margaret Wilson, eldest daughter of the president, ever since they met in New York, where Miss Wilson was studying music.

Coincidentally, Miss Jessie Wilson played a joke on her invited guests by setting the ceremony for half-past four, instead of noon. Society had purchased tallow-dark gowns for the event. As the proper dress will be elaborate afternoon frocks, every guest will be scrambling with rush orders.

It is learned only precedent prevented Miss Wilson from being married privately.

Postmaster Waldo May Be Out.

Marquette, Mich., Nov. 12.—There are fears here the steamer L. C. Waldo has met with disaster in the great storm on Lake Superior.

Daniels in West Nov. 17.

Washington, Nov. 12.—Secretary Daniels of the navy, who is to deliver an address in this city on Nov. 19 in connection with a celebration of the 113th anniversary of the establishment of the Jay treaty, will fulfill all other engagements while he is away. On Nov. 17 he will inspect Great Lakes naval training school at Chicago. On the 18th he will speak in Omaha and Lincoln, Neb. On his way home he will deliver three speaches in St. Louis on Nov. 20.

Difficult Operations are Described.

Chicago, Nov. 12.—The Clinical Congress of Surgeons heard Professor Harvey Cushing of Harvard, describe a new method of performing a gasserian ganglion operation, one of the most delicate and dangerous in surgery. The gasserian ganglion, or group of nerves, is situated on the sides of the head next to the brain and when disturbed causes a violent neuralgia which often drives the victim to suicide Professor Cushing said.

Every year in the greenhouses of the department of agriculture at Washington experiments are made in the development of new chrysanthemums, and the best one produced is named for some young lady of the administration. This fall the honor falls to Miss Jessie Woodrow Wilson, daughter of the president, who is to be married on November 25 to Francis Sayre.

MOST VALUABLE CORN CROP

PRODUCTION DECREASES, BUT REVENUES ARE LARGER.

Total Production 2,463,017,000, Compared With 3,124,746,000 in 1912 —Price Is 70 Cents.

Washington, Nov. 12.—This year's corn crop promises to be the most valuable this or any other nation ever has produced, although the department of agriculture's preliminary estimate of production todicates it will be more than half a billion bushels less in size than the record crop of last year, and the smallest since 1902.

Based on the department's figures of 70.7 cents per bushel, the average farm price on Nov. 1, the crop as estimated now is worth $1,741,553,019, while the value of the 1912 record crop was $1,520,464,000. The previous most valuable crop was that of 1909 when it was worth $1,522,822,000.

The department's preliminary estimate of production increased by 90,- 006,050 bushels the estimate made in October and also that made in September. This was taken to indicate that the damage from the very severe drought in the Middle West was somewhat over-estimated. The department also estimated the production next month may show further increase in the size of the crop.

The greatest damage from the drought is indicated in the figures for Kansas, which show the acre yield there to have been reduced to 3.3 bushels, compared with 23 bushels last year, in Missouri where the yield was 17.5 bushels compared with last year's 33 bushels and in Oklahoma where it was 11 bushels below last year's yield; in Iowa, 9 bushels; in Nebraska, 9 bushels; Missouri, 14.5 bushels; Indiana, 29 bushels and Ohio, 5.2 bushels.

Corn—Total production, preliminarily estimated 2,463,017,000, compared with 3,124,746,000 bushels last year. Yield per acre, 22 bushels, compared with 29.3 bushels last year, and 27 bushels, the 5-year average. Average farm price, 70.7 cents per bushel, compared with 58.4 cents last year. Quality, 92 per cent, as compared with the 10-year average. Corn in 1912 crop remaining on farms Nov. 1 was 127,022,000 bushels, compared with 64,784,000 bushels on the 1911 crop remaining on farms Nov. 1 last year.

Million Dollar Suit Abandoned.

New York, Nov. 12.—Announcement is made by Adolph C. Trale, counsel for Mrs. Clarence H. Mackay, that the action commenced in the supreme court by Mrs. Joseph A. Blake, against Mrs. Mackay for $1,000,000 for alienation of the affections of her husband, Dr. Joseph A. Blake, has been discontinued. "At the time Mrs. Blake signed a consent to the discontinuance of this action," the announcement read, "she executed an instrument releasing Mrs. Mackay from all claims. Not one cent has been paid or promised."

THAW LITIGATION ONLY JUST BEGUN

GOV. FELKER SIGNS EXTRADITION PAPERS, BUT DOESN'T MEAN MUCH.

UP TO SUPREME COURT NOW

Return to Mattewan Not Yet Determined—Attorneys Prepare Further Fight for Client's Liberty.

Concord, N. H., Nov. 10.—Governor Felker, Saturday, signed the extradition papers for the return of Harry K. Thaw to New York on the request of Governor Glynn. Thaw is charged with conspiracy in New York county. The decision, which was a victory for William T. Jerome and his assistants in their fight to return Thaw to New York, does not mean that he will be back to Mattawan immediately. The fugitive's fight may last years.

Basis of Decision.

The governor based his decision on the indictment returned against Thaw in New York county, which charged him with conspiracy to escape from the insane asylum at Mattawan, N. Y., in which he was committed after his second trial for the killing of Stanford White. Thaw made his unsensational flight August 17, and a few days later was arrested near Coatlcook, Canada.

Thaw's attorneys announced that they would immediately file an amended meet to their petition for a writ of habeas corpus, application for which was made soon after Thaw was arrested in this state following his deportation from Canada.

The Original Petition.

Because his extradition has now been granted on the basis of the New York county indictment, the petition must be amended accordingly.

Thaw was not present when Governor Felker announced his decision to the attorneys representing the fugitive and the state of New York at the capitol. He will remain here in the custody of United States Marshal Nute and Sheriff Drew pending federal proceedings.

It had been generally expected that Governor Felker would sign the extradition papers presented by Governor Glynn of New York. In no single instance have the conventional lines and in this case shifted the whole matter automatically onto the shoulders of Judge Murray J. Aldrich, of the United States court for the district of New Hampshire.

Neither Mr. Jerome nor Sheriff Fred C. Dumbleton, of Westchester county, deputized to receive the fugitive when the extradition was granted, were here to receive the decision. As there is a foregone conclusion that Thaw will be returned to New York state on account of the writ of habeas corpus which is pending in the United States district court.

Reclamation Service Officers.

Washington, Nov. 12.—Secretary Lane of the interior department, has placed the reclamation service under the supervision of three officers of whom are his appointees. F. H. Newell remains as director and A. P. Davis as chief engineer. Judge Phil R. King, formerly a justice of the supreme court of Oregon, is made chief counsel of the service; W. A. Ryan, formerly of the interstate commerce commission, comptroller and D. O'Donnell, of Montana, supervisor of irrigation.

Mail Sacks Looted of $10,000.

Chicago, Nov. 12.—Theft of money and jewelry, valued at $10,000, from a mail sack, was disclosed by James Stagg, postoffice inspector here. The crime is alleged by Colonel Stuart to have been committed by Albert Tardy, a mail wagon driver. The theft occurred Monday. Tardy collected five mail sacks, containing registered packages, at the South Water street, Michigan "Pumple and Stock Exchange substations. Suspicion was aroused by finding the abandoned wagon, the

COLD WAVE OVER LARGE AREA

REACHES FROM CANADA ALMOST TO FLORIDA.

Considerable Suffering and Property Loss is Reported From Big Drop in Temperature.

Chicago, Nov. 11.—A freezing temperature, with gales of wind, settled down over the central and eastern parts of the nation, reaching as far south as Florida. Behind the first storm of the 20- and 80-mile blasts of wind, icy wreckage and property on land and water, including telegraph lines, docks and ships and houses. Lake men declared it the most severe and disastrous one that had oeen running on Lake Michigan. Thousands in the South Chicago and Gary, docks were wrecked by mountainous waves, filled inland and washed away, bathing beaches left stretches of stone, and small boats were heaped on shore or were whipped against each other.

Through Ohio, Indiana, western Pennsylvania and southern Michigan, snow and high winds that co-operated to force blizzards made travel nearly impossible, delayed rail traffic and tore down miles of telegraph wires.

Even in Georgia and Florida the temperature dropped near the freezing point. The west and northwest of this cause there has been less suffering, save in the Canadian Northwest, where a new storm and cold wave, much more severe than the one eugfering the United States is forming, ready to drop southward into the United States at the end of the week.

The cold weather stretched uniformly southeast from Duluth to Tallahassee, Fla., and from Chicago to Green bay to Gary—higher winds that destroyed telegraphic communication in Ohio, and rlelec wind with falling temperatures southeast of Ohio, was the situation at midnight.

In Minnesota and at Sault Ste. Marie the temperature was below 10 degrees at Cincinnati and St. Louis they showed 28, and at Pittsburg, 24.

At Milwaukee, the $10,000 municipal breakwater, a part of the extensive new Kinbor project, was washed away in the storm, and more than that sum in damage was done to property along in Milwaukee harbors.

The entire equipment of the construction company building the breakwater was destroyed. Detroit was practically without communication. The telegraph companies were crippled east and south and electric lines were tied up by trees across tracks and wires down. All but one down Michigan the storm wrought havoc.

Aim to Better Farm Life.

Washington, Nov. 12.—Discussion of country life problems and conditions in the United States and Canada, with special reference to the 18th annual meeting of the American Association of Farmers' Institute workers.

10-Year-Old Suit is Ended.

St. Louis, Nov. 12.—A suit filed in the circuit court here 10 years ago has been decided. It was based on a claim of Patrick F. Kelly against Charles G. Little, brokers, against John C. Henderson, former senator from Missouri. They sued for $10,000 as their share of a $30,000 fee, alleged to have been received by Henderson and his law partner, George H. Shields, in litigation. The finding was for Little on claim and gives Kelcher $947.69, with interest at 6 per cent from 1904.

School's Size Doesn't Matter.

New York, Nov. 11.—"The real test of the measure of a university's efficiency are not the number of students enrolled, the size of its endowment, or the magnificence of its physical equipment." President Nicholas Murray Butler of Columbia university says in his annual report to the trustees. The true test and measure are to be found in the productive scholarship of the university's teachers and in the quality of the men and women who go out with the stamp of the university's approval upon them.

PURITY PRINCIPLES PUT IN PLATFORM

THIS PROMULGATION TO BE BATTLE-STANDARD OF ORGANIZATION.

MANY ADVANCED PRINCIPLES

These Incorporated in Document—U. S. Senator W. S. Kenyon Asks Support for Red Light Injunction Bill.

Minneapolis, Nov. 12.—Principles of purity incorporated in a platform to be in battle standard were promulgated in the most important business session so far, of the Purity federation.

Scientific teaching of children in sex matters; training of teachers and children to impart such instruction; inspectorian reading of the Bible in all public schools; state aids where laws to supplement the federal law; a federal uniform marriage and divorce law, were among the most striking features of the platform.

Vote Reached Late.

Vote on the platform was reached just a short time before the evening session which featured United States Senator William S. Kenyon of Iowa on his red light injunction law, Mrs. Florence Kelly on working woman eod their wages, and John Collier on moving pictures.

As the congress drew near its close, discussion on what it shall stand for has worried and the afternoon session was fired by lively debate.

Closer teh on the morals of preachers was demanded by one resolution which was passed after drawing heavily entitled into action. A plea upon all religious organizations to extenlie the greatest care in investigating the moral character of men selected for their pulpits. The reason for the resolution as stated to the congress was that scandal has recently brought the church into bad repute by repeated revealings of immorality among its leaders.

Senator Kenyon Asks Aid.

"Our government is a government of committees," was the statement of United States Senator William S. Kenyon of Iowa, in asking the aid of congress to help the passage of his red light injunction bill now before congress. "Every night this is starting at the root of the segregated district in Washington the property owners in now buried in a committee of the house. It has already passed the senate and has been referred to a committee. It mer die in that committee. This is the result of the present war of running congress. Committees are all powerful. I am looking forward to the day when committee hearings will be public and we throw off our subjection to them and get back again to government by the people."

INDIANS SUE FOR MILLIONS

ARE AFTER CHICAGO FOR LAKE FRONT LAND.

(Injunction Writ Asked That Will Tie Up Improvements for Twenty Miles.

Chicago, Nov. 12.—Plans of municipal improvement along the 20 miles of lake front here have been jeopardized by a suit for injunction filed against the city and others by representatives of the Pottawattomie and Ottawa of the Pottawattomie nation of Indians.

The suit also makes claim to a strip of land along the lake front from Evanston to South Chicago, valued at many millions of dollars. The Indians based their suit upon a treaty between the United States and the United Tribes of Ottawas, Chippewas and Pottawattomie Indians Aug. 3, 1775, at Greenville, Ohio.

The government surveys, the suit charges, did not place the eastern boundary of the grant in 100 feet back from the lake, provided to give the Indians fishing and camping privileges along the lake shore.

A somewhat similar suit was filed a year ago by Indians of several tribes individually and is now pending in the federal courts. The petitions ask that Chicago be enjoined from carrying on any improvements to the lake shore pending a settlement of the suit.

FIRM USED SIMILAR LABEL

Seattle Firm is Enjoined From Imitating Trade Idea of Rival Medicine Firm.

Seattle, Nov. 13.—Judge Jeremiah Neter of the United States district court, has granted a permanent injunction in behalf of the Centaur company of New York, the manufacturers of Fletcher's Castoria, against the Stewart & Holmes Drug company of this city.

The defendant company is one of the oldest and largest concerns of its kind in the Northwest.

The controversy arose from the similarity of the labels of the well known preparation and from the evidence filed in the case, it was shown that the infringing label was first discovered on sale in Honolulu and was traced to its origin in Seattle.

STATE NEWS IN BRIEF

DISCUSS HEALTH OF CATTLE AND HOGS

CHOLERA AND OTHER DISEASES OF LIVESTOCK SUBJECT OF COUNTY AGENTS.

CATTLE ARE A "SAFE BUY"

So Says Veterinarian In Discussing Herds of Minnesota—Various Hints Given Farmers By Experts.

Minneapolis.—Hog cholera was discussed in detail by a conference of county agricultural agents at the state agricultural college.

Dr. M. H. Reynolds and Dr. H. Creston Hoskins, both veterinarians, delivered the principal addresses, the former in a talk on diseases of cattle, with special reference to prevention and treatment of hog cholera and the latter on the work of the serum plant at the agricultural college.

Cattle Well Protected.

"No place in America and probably nowhere else in the world," declared Dr. Reynolds, "can a man buy cattle with greater safety than in Minnesota. Cattle in this state are extremely free from tuberculosis and other diseases, and the task in the near future is the minimum for the world." He gave statistics on hog cholera showing success in more than 80 per cent of cases.

H. M. Bush discussed the advantages to be derived through organization of farmers' clubs. The club and cooperation ideas, fruit marketing and other similar topics were on the list of progress.

Farm water supply, farm sewage disposal and farm forestry were discussed at the session of the county agents. Dean Andrew R. Woods told how water supplies are polluted and how to prevent pollution. The principal points made by Dean Woods may be summed up as follows:

Points of Dean Woods.

The movement of bacteria through close clay soil is slow. A shallow well is never safe unless it is in close clay soil. Care should be taken in curbing a well to see that the drainage is away from the well and that the well is high enough so that surface water will not get into it. Springs and wells are frequently affected with typhoid germs by persons washing in the water and then allowing it to drain back into the well. The covering of a well should be absolutely tight. Typhoid germs and cholera germs and mosquitoes may be killed in ponds by a treatment of copper sulphate or chloride of lime, using one part to a million parts of water by weight. Dean Woods said extensive experiments had been carried on by the government with sulphate and hypochloride and he referred the inquirers to the government bulletins explaining the results.

Sewage Dangers Shown.

The danger of allowing sewage to be drained into the ground where it might get into water supply was emphasized by J. T. Wyer of the engineering department. He explained the use of the septic tank and said that at its worst the septic tank is better than the cesspool.

MUCH TO BE THANKFUL FOR:

Governor Eberhart Issues Proclamation Setting Aside November 27.

St. Paul.—Thankfulness for abundant prosperity, industrial conditions, happiness and contentment are contained in Governor Eberhart's Thanksgiving day proclamation. It is printed out in the proclamation that the people of Minnesota have every reason to be thankful this year, and with the increase of the industrial prosperity, citizens ought to give thanks on the day set aside for that purpose.

In full, the proclamation follows:

"Abundant reasons for thankfulness on the part of the people of Minnesota exist in these closing months of the year 1913. As we acquire a perspective of the year that is closing, it is evident that the people of our state have every reason to be grateful and to acknowledge the permanent blessings that have come from the Supreme Giver of all things. Forever before in the history of our state have conditions been so gratifying. Industrial peace prevails, prosperity reigns, and happiness and contentment vie with each other in the joy of life. Our crops have been of some purer, our industrial prosperity greater, and through it all there has been a distinct awakening of a higher purpose and a firmer determination to realize to its complete fullness the opportunity that exists for our people.

"A sentiment beautiful and exalted has filled with a natural attitude of reverence and gratefulness in setting apart a day, in this year, for the expression of the universal sentiment that the state is in the hands of us. It is fitting that we of Minnesota should especially recognize the fact that we have been kindly dealt with, that we should review the blessings of material prosperity, that we may the more fully recognize the successful efforts that are being made to solve the moral and social problems that confront us, and that we should lift up our hearts in glad and reverent thanksgiving.

"Therefore, in recognition of the conditions that exist, and in consideration of the proper spiritual expression of our people in a way that will be felt as as a worthy inheritor of the institutions that were founded and handed down to us by our fathers."

A. O. EBERHART,
Governor.

AUTO BANDITS ROB A BANK

Waltham Institution Loses $6,400 and Many Valuable Papers.

Waltham.—Bandits riding in an auto descended upon Waltham some time Thursday night and blew the safe of the State bank.

Some $4,400, practically all the bank's cash on hand, was taken, and the robbers soon made off in the machine which brought them into the town. The bankers had left the safe unlocked on guard, and the robbery was not discovered until early Friday.

The sheriff at Austin, county seat of Mower county, was notified at once and came here at once to begin an investigation and start pursuit.

Waltham, scene of the robbery, is twelve miles north of Austin and is the center of a prosperous farming district.

All the valuable papers in the bank were carried away. The job was a scientific one and there is no clue for the police to work upon.

ASSESSORS MISSED MILLIONS IN TAXES

SPECIAL SLEUTHS AOO GREAT AMOUNT TO STATE TAX ROLL.

REASSESSMENTS ARE MADE

Commission Makes Investigations in 242 Districts—142 Per Cent Gain Made in Figures.

St. Paul.—Regular assessors whose duty it was to get the names of holders of moneys and credits on the state tax rolls were not wonderfully successful as sleuths, according to figures obtained from the office of the tax board. The tax commission put special assessors in the field and they found millions of taxable moneys and credits that had been overlooked. They also found that the original assessors had overlooked more than half the persons assessable.

Reassessments Ordered.

Reassessment was ordered in 242 taxing districts of the state. So far, reassessment returns have been received from 102 taxing districts, and in every case a substantial increase is shown over the returns made by the regular assessors. In the district so far reported the amount of moneys and credits returned by the regular assessors was $7,815,794, while the special assessors found $9,440,192 in the same districts, a gain of $2,588,398, or 142 per cent over the original returns.

In twelve cities and villages so far reported the original assessment of $1,254,341 has been increased to $2,958,317 by the special assessors, a gain of $1,703,976, or 127 per cent. The number of people assessed by the regular assessors was 611, while the special assessors found 1,466 persons subject to the money and credit tax.

ST. PAUL'S MYSTERIOUS CAVE

Explorations Reopened and Mouth of Fabled Rendezvous is Located.

St. Paul.—Carver's cave, which has been an archaeological mystery here for thirty years and the object of considerable investigation and excavations for months, has been rediscovered. John H. Colwell is the explorer. Mr. Colwell, who is president of the Mounds Park Improvement association, has had workmen digging at the mouth of the cave and the opening has been finally reached. Initials were carved on the walls, but were almost indiscernible and the cave is loaded with water. The cave is located in the bluff under the Indian mounds and Mr. Colwell will ask the city to make park improvements around it.

Thirty years ago Jonathan Carver described the cave and said it contained many Indian hieroglyphics. The mouth has since been closed by washouts. Many stories have been told about treasures concealed in the cavern.

MRS. LECKWOLD HELD INSANE

Confessed Poisoner of Child Declared Not Responsible for Her Acts.

Minneapolis.—Because she was considered insane when she gave her daughter, Viola, poison, Mrs. Ida Leckwold was found guilty, according to a verdict returned after the jury had deliberated the case for nearly two hours.

Under terms of the statute governing such cases, Mrs. Leckwold was remanded to jail pending the sentence of the court sentence for the state hospital at Rochester, where she will be held until discharged by competent authority.

Without apparent concern in the findings of the 12 men, Mrs. Leckwold was led into the court room without the slightest sign of interest or nervousness. When the verdict was read and the court ordered her taken back to her cell, tears trickled down her cheeks as her sister embraced her.

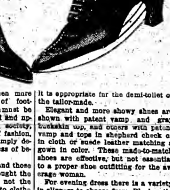
Winona Wants White Way.

Winona.—Retail merchants of Winona have just organized the Winona White Way Association, with George Hirsch, a leading merchant, as president to secure modern lighting.

Prevailing Styles in the New Shoes.



EVERY season finds women more than exacting in the quality of their wear. Shoes and stockings must be faultless for the well dressed and up-to-date woman. It is not the question whether she be a devotee of fashion, or engaged in business or simply devoting her time to the business of being a woman.

The styles now prevailing and those best preceding them have brought the feet into prominence. It is not the fashion to conceal them, but to clothe them daintily and set the filmiest of draperies about them. Lace and chiffon petticoat, shaded skirts and inhanging draperies all besperk attention to fine footwear.

For general wear a neat looking, inconspicuous shoe all of leather, or of leather and cloth, should be chosen. Perfect fit and neat finish are the matters of importance for shoe to be worn for shopping, traveling and general utility. Two pairs are more economical than one, if such shoes are worn every day, and one should alternate them. They are easily kept in commission in this way. One pair dressed and on the shoe tree stands always in readiness. Properly planned and shred and polished, they will pay for the attention and care service.

For dressier wear in the winter there is the shoe with patent calf vamp and brocaded silk top in black. This is an elegant shoe with any visiting or dinner gown except the most brilliant of opera or ball gowns. The same vamp with dark cloth top puts the shoe in another class where it is appropriate for the demi-toilet or the tailor-made.

Elegant and more showy shoes are shown with patent vamp and gray or bluish suede, and others with patent vamp and tops in shepherd check or in cloth of wader leather matching a gown in color. These made-to-match shoes are effective, but not essential to a proper shoe outfitting for the extravagant woman.

For evening dress there is a variety in slippers to choose from. Black satin with a French heel is a great favorite. The range of ornamentation for the toes of evening slippers is quite wide also.

In black or bronze there is the strapped slipper with bead embroidery. It is a graceful shoe and a fine choice for those who need only one pair of slippers and who consider the season's full dress occasions in the face. It is dressy enough for any wear.

The price of good shoes has advanced because the materials of which they are made cost more than they have formerly. There is no economy in buying cheap shoes. The expenditure at the end of a year will be greater if one keeps the feet respectably clothed, if cheap shoes are bought, than if the better grades are worn. If one must economize let it be in some other direction and not in the matter of footwear. Quality cannot be sacrificed here without a certainty involving both economy and comfort in the end.

COIFFURE AND HAIR ORNAMENT MOST EFFECTIVE

THE very attractive and becoming coiffure just described and the dress here described as the "Casque" coiffure. All the hair is waved and combed back from the face and neck and the crown of the head at the back. Some is then allowed to fall over the front with the hair at each side brought down over the ears, wholly concealing them.

To make this hairdress the hair must be parted of all around the crown of the head, and waved. That which is left on the crown is to be laid in a flat coil at the back and pinned down securely. All the remainder except the look left at the middle of the forehead) is to be drawn loosely back to the coil and over it. The hair at the nape of the neck is first twisted up and the ends are added to the coil or pinned around it. The ends of the front and side hair are then disposed of in the same way.

Then the look at the middle of the forehead is parted and brought down at each side over the ears to the nape of the neck. The ends (the long curling light) are tucked under the waved hair covering the coil and pinned into place with invisible pins.

A light fringe of hair curled in flat, short rings is then arranged across the head in a line more or less curved or straight, as best becomes the wearer. These ringlets must be flattened to the head to preserve the correct line in the coiffure. This may be done by tying them down with a light veil for a few moments.

The coiffure is finished with an ornamental band and single, curling spray of feathers. The band in the costume is made of flat jade beads matching those worn with the costume about the neck. But there are innumerable bands, laces of black gauze or velvet and rhinestones being among the most effective.

The costume worn by the handsome brunette is of black velvet and silver embroidered net, with a skirt which appears to wrap about the figure, terminating in a high waist line. The other beauty bodice is made of white satin. With a drapery of gauze it is appropriate to suggest a Greek robe.

WORK IN THE GARDEN IS NOT YET OVER

Place Cold Frames in a Sunny Spot in the Garden and Get an Early Start With the Spring Vegetables.

Just because frost has come, it is no sign there is nothing more to do in the garden.

If a good thick coating of mulch is put over the asparagus, rhubarb and other plants of this nature, they will have a much earlier start in the spring than if left bare during the winter.

Leave the mulch on until all danger of freezing is over in the spring, but do not remove on a bright, sunshiny day.

The cold frame is a great thing for getting an early start with vegetables in the spring. They should be placed in a sunny spot in the garden, well protected from the north wind, and filled with loose soil under-laid with about four inches of half rotted manure.

Now the seeds of lettuce, radishes and other vegetables of this kind in the fall and cover very lightly with earth. Then, place a deep cover of litter and lay it on thick enough to keep out the frost.

Next spring you will be surprised to see these vegetables coming up through the ground when you take off the mulch. They will have from one to two weeks start over those plants still in the spring.

Come to think of it, this is pretty near the way nature takes care of seeds in winter. They fall from the plant, bury themselves in the soil, and the wind covers them with a mulch of leaves and grass.

For the window boxes in which to start vegetables next spring, take up now a quantity of loose rich soil and store it to kill all vegetable life. This can be done by heating wood over the soil before it is taken up, or of the heat of the sun.

GOOD PLANS FOR CONCRETE BUILDINGS

First Consideration Is to Determine Proper Proportion of Materials Needed.

(By O. P. PENNOCK, Colorado Agricultural College.)

The first thing to consider in any concrete structure is the proper proportion of materials. A simple method for determining the amounts necessary, is to apply the "water measure" method. Take a washtub and a small bucket and determine the number of buckets of sand necessary to fill or nearly fill the tub. Next determine the number of buckets of water that are necessary to entirely fill the voids in the sand. Then, if one wishes to experiment in using the water just to the point of the sand. The number of buckets of water determines the amount of cement for the amount of sand measured. Next measure the buckets stone or gravel into the tub, and, if the voids are small, it will probably require the same measurement, and this gives the amount of sand and each side of the openings there have been sown crocheted rings, through which a lacing of ribbon is run.

Worth Trying.

The recipe of a doctor for those who have suffered from bilthy complexion and fatigue to the extent that a tonic would be nearly as effective. To regulate the weight of the skirt shadow for each side of the openings there have been sown crocheted rings, through which a lacing of ribbon is run.

Slipped Petticoat.

We have had the "tango" gown; now has descended upon us the "tango" petticoat. This latest addition to the wardrobe of the fashionable woman is made of bit two pieces, with seams in the side, which, needless to say, are open for a quite distance by the knee. The front and back breadths of the petticoat are scalloped, rising gradually up to the joining of the seams at the knee, and the garment in this instance is edged with a deep ruffle of the silk of which the skirt is made, for it is not likely that any other would be nearly as effective. To regulate the weight of the skirt shadow for each side of the openings there have been sown crocheted rings, through which a lacing of ribbon is run.

Stipped Spinach.

Spinach is the greatest we put 18 buckets of sand into the tub and it takes six buckets of water to fill the voids, then the proportion of cement would be about one bucket to each three. Again, we put fifteen buckets of broken stone into the tub and find that it takes five buckets of water to fill the voids, then the proportion of cement would be about one bucket to five or three to five. Our total mixture, therefore, consists of one part cement, three parts sand and five parts broken stone.

WILD MUSTARD IS HARMFUL NUISANCE

Solution of Granulated Iron Sulphate and Water Will Prove Quite Effective.

(By C. S. MILLER.)

What a nuisance mustard can be if it gets a good start. Here is a way to kill it. To cover an acre, empty a barrel of granulated iron sulphate and $11 per ton into a fifty-two gallon barrel and fill with water; necessary for a few minutes until the sulphate is in solution.

The solution is put into a sprayer tank and used immediately as it kept until the desired time for using.

Best Time to Spray.

Spray on a clear day. If rain follows a week maybe you will have to spray again.

Dasies, cockle-burr, blind weed, rag weed, smartweed, sheep dock and many other weed were partially or wholly killed from the first field where the tests were made for the determination of mustard.

Wholly effective results in fields where the tests were made for the determination of mustard.

The solution should be sprayed when the mustard plants are in the third leaf or before the plants are in blossom in order to have the spray do the most effective work.

ALFALFA CROP IS VERY DEEP ROOTED

When Once Started Plant Needs, Little Encouragement, Working All the Time.

Gasoline and oil help us to plow deep, but there are depths far beyond their reach needed by the plant roots. Last year in the corn belt, they went for you all the time, day and night, through a long growing season, and the while pays a good rent for the land.

Alfalfa burns no oil, needs no harness, eats or drives! Once started it works as it will pay you to plow it up, said given you a field filled with subsoil ploughs every few years more for any other, crop roots than you could possibly accomplish with great cost. These things are worth considering before the alfalfa field is plowed up to make way for other crops which call for lots of work and expense.

Clean Feed for Horses.

Don't feed dirty oats to your horses. The dust, weed seeds, and other foreign matter in the grain is disagreeable and injurious to animals.

Use a sieve to measure the grain, and give it a few shakes to allow the dirt and seeds to fall out before feeding. Measure your wheat over the grain in the sieve, or dip the sieve of grain in a bucket or tub of water a few times. This is a good plan, as it removes all the dust and sand. Your horses are kept cleaner by treating the grain in this way before feeding.

Plan for Next Year.

This year's farming probably returned you "value received" for the amount of energy and you put into it, and if the results do not satisfy you, plan more judiciously for next season.

Dispose of Maggot.

A hen that is constantly fighting the other hens should be disposed of, for even if she lays well herself, which is unlikely, she will cut down the production of the rest by constantly ag-

BUILDING THE NORTHERN PACIFIC INTO TOWN.

One met commenting on the Gazette's story of last week about the plan of the Northern Pacific railway to get into town said that he didn't think the paper had the "right hunch" regarding the location of the depot. This man does not think that the depot will be located on South Main street, and he may be right. It may be more than an even chance that he is right, for the depot may be constructed at almost any point from Main street to Third street.

The Gazette stated that it is proposed to put the depot on South Main street, and that is what is proposed, but, even so, that may not be done. In fact, you cannot tell definitely what a railroad company is going to do until it is done. No doubt it is the most common practice of railroad officials in acquiring right of way to not have their plans so definitely determined that they may not be altered to meet local conditions.

The man who thinks the depot is going to be on South Main street may be right. The man who thinks it is going to be built on Third street may be right. And they may both be mistaken. It would be possible to construct an up-town depot without using either one of the locations mentioned. For example trains could run in and back out over a line parallel with Third street, or parallel with Main street with a depot very close to the principal business section of the city, though the needs.

The advance of civilization has almost exterminated the American Indian—and has given us the Mexican greaser.

If American expatriates must be penitentiary and reformatory prisoners cannot be employed in road work or in clearing state lands in northern Minnesota, which is fortunate. For the roads need to be improved and fresh air would not hurt the prisoners.

It is to the credit of American women that they are not enthusiastic over Mrs. Pankhurst's anarchistic methods. Mrs. Pankhurst can also be credited with being comparatively modest of speech while in this country, due to the fact perhaps that she is away from the seat of war and is seeking only "substantial sympathy."

The liberation of Dr. Dumba, the former Case Lake mayor, is an act that no ordinary mortal cannot well understand, especially since no explanation has been offered for the virtuous leniency. Dr. Dumba, alleged to have been the "brains" of a band of criminals, was, when formally charged, convicted of a serious crime The extreme penalty for the particular offense was three years, a very modest term of incarceration for a man in his position—a leader in his community, of reputed respectability, and at the same time the "brains" of an alleged band of criminals. One may believe in the pardoning and pa roling of prisoners when their punishment seems to have been sufficient and especially when their reformation seems to have been accomplished, and at the same time wonder at the extreme leniency shown the former mayor of Case Lake. He was charged with conspiring with several alleged notorious characters in northern Minnesota in the burning of the postoffice at Puposky, and was convicted of the charge. He had served thirteen months when he was liberated. The agitator may point to this situation with the statement that many a poor unfortunate has done ten years time for less.

A MOCK FUNERAL

By WILLARD BLAKEMAN

John Wickersham lived on the Pacific coast. John was a mining wreck. There are inventive wrecks, literary wrecks, artistic wrecks and many other kinds of wrecks. In other words, he had spent two-thirds of his life taking enormous risks as to loss of time, in say nothing of other detriments, seeking a fortune to raise in the ground. Finally, discouraged, he settled down on a small piece of ground with his wife and children and tried to make a living for himself and them in a work he knew nothing about, farming.

Katie was John's little daughter. She loved the big ocean near which she lived and spent as much of her time as could be spared in looking out upon it from the bluffs or running about on the beach. She had on a big boy that afforded a tolerable harbor, though it was low and sandy and slips. However, there was a necessity for a custom house. Where on old man down the coast could get it? He was not there for business, for there was no business for him to do. He was there to watch, and the way he watched was by sleeping.

One morning Katie went to the shore just to have a look at the broad expanse and wound up her as big as the heavens above. She saw a ship approaching, and a ship was for her as rare as to her as agreeable a sight as a girl dying up in the city. The vessel was so near that she could see persons on her deck. While she child looked at the vessel she forgot that she could hear the chains rattling in the bow pipes. Then a boat was put on the shore and pointed for the custom house. It remained there a short while, then pulled back to the ship.

Presently a boat, oblong in shape, was lowered into the water. While those aboard the vessel stood with hands uplifted Katie watched to see what was the removal of a corpse and bodied out, deeply impressed. And it occurred to her that this was the first time in the centuries since it was to respect persons in burying a man on the shore.

The oars flashed in the sunlight, and the boat drew near a point on the beach to which Katie had run when she heard the vessel stood with hands uplifted. Katie watched to see what was the removal of a corpse and bodied out, deeply impressed. And it occurred to her that this was the first time in the centuries since it was to respect persons in burying a man on the shore.

The oars flashed in the sunlight, and the boat drew near a point on the beach to which Katie had run when she heard the vessel stood with hands uplifted. Katie was. There was but little surf, but there was a heavy swell on it, and four sailors removed the bier from the boat and bore it to the crest of a hill, where they dug a grave. The persons from the little hamlet near by, pleased at so unusual a sight as the oblong doing, even if it were only a removal, came to see it. Some, who remained in her own position, saw the sailors dig the grave, a few words were spoken by one of the sailor party, the earth replaced, a wooden headboard erected and all the sailors filed back to the ship.

Katie went home and at dinner told her parents what she had seen. John Wickersham listened to her recital, and made comments. When he had finished his dinner, he went out to remove his work coat, and then returned to supper he was more taciturn even than is often the case with him. It was dark he took up a spade and said to his wife;

"My dear, I'm going to the shore."

"What on earth are you going to the shore for?"

"I'm going to dig up that corpse that was buried there."

"You're not going to do any such thing. What you going to do that for?"

"There's gold in the ship."

"Oh, Lord! You've been digging holes on a gold fever long enough, but its mode you crazy on the subject. For heaven's sake do get the idea out of your head."

"Listen to me, Susan. Those sailors didn't bury a corpse on the shore with Fluge's autograph. Old Grout, the collector is lying around still in the white. They asked permission to bury a corpse and either bashful or some shirt sleeve chief take it in, and he lets market and make a big profit out of it if everything is as reported. I'm on the duty."

The poor woman groaned, and her husband went out into the darkness, going to the hill his daughter had described. It was a lonely place, and he had no great fear of being interrupted by any one. Reaching the top down to the box, lifted it out, and his suspicions were confirmed by the heavy mess. He therefore carried it without opening it to his home and placed it in a shed. His wife looked at it in agony, supposing that her husband had lost his mind. Also, she thought the screwdriver removed one screw after another and took off the lid.

He did not find a corpse, as his wife expected, but some overlying paper describing title to some land and a postcheard lantern. Taking off the cover of one he displayed a number of gold bees. Every one of the boxes contained the same kind of goods. He looked at his wife and saw her gazing on the bees in wonder.

"Katie," he called the father, "come here." Katie came and he added; "That's the corpse you saw bury this morning. It's a live enough corpse to give us a lift. I always said it was gold in a hole, and I have. But the first come through Katie."

John Wickersham's life restored goods worth $40,000, and, using Katie's description of the shore, he found the commander of a revenue cutter to capture her and other lawful prizes were unearthed at several different points. John's reward for all this was sufficient to make him a man perfectly comfortable for the rest of their lives.

Removal of the Tonsils.

The operation of removal of the tonsils is a common one, and often it is popularly considered and should certainly not be undertaken lightly, but discreetly, advisedly and otherwise. Tonsils should not be removed for trivial symptoms. Tonsilitomy is not justifiable simply because the tonsils protrude in front of the pillars, or because they look ragged or for occasional sore throat, or because they contain plugs, or because the patient is under either for anemia, or for any reason apparently not of a serious nature, or to protect the child from indefinite infection, or as an occasional attack of simple acute tonsillitis.—Boston Surgical Journal.

A Broken Shoestring

By MARTHA V. MONROE

While making a short stay in a city that was not my home a friend, who wished to see me on some errand, for I was obliged to be absent during my sojourn, gave me an invitation card to one of the meetings of a dancing club of which he was a member. To kill time I consented to go, but I knew nothing of the ladies who would be there, nor was there any person to introduce me. Had my friend who gave me the invitation been there I would undoubtedly have enjoyed the evening. As it was I had a very slow time.

I saw there a young lady who was evidently similarly situated as I was. She was very attractive looking, but was nevertheless a wallflower. I would have been glad to know her, but could only do so by addressing her without an introduction, which I had not the assurance to do. She saw me looking at her wistfully, and I saw an amused smile on her face in consequence. This should have encouraged me to speak to her, but I was fearful of a rebuff. Ten years later I would not have been so bashful.

But the wallflower. A few days after the dance while passing along the street I saw a young lady with her foot on a step trying to tie her shoe. It is not an easy matter for a woman on the street carrying a parasol and a reticule to do this, so I volunteered to do it for her. Without looking at her I bent over her foot, and while pulling on the string it broke. I immediately took off one of my own shoes, placed it where she could rest a foot on it, removed the shoe with the broken string and substituted my own shoestring. Then, the shoe laces tied, I turned and looked at her.

She was the wallflower I had seen at the evening before.

Her smile indicated that she recognized me. Indeed, it was the same amused smile I had seen on those same lips. However, she treated me politely for an hour, but asked me not my pocketknife and, cutting off a bit of the broken string from the shoe, handed it to me, with the words;

"The only return I can make for your shoestring."

She passed on, and I stood gaping after her, doing myself a fool reason, at the Probate office in the Court House in the City of Red Lake Falls in the County of Red Lake, said petition.

And it is further Ordered, That this order shall be published once each week for three successive weeks prior to said day of hearing in the Red Lake Falls Gazette, a weekly newspaper printed and published at Red Lake Falls, in said County.

An Ordinance Regulating and Prescribing the Management, Control, Rates and Masters of the Water Works of the City of Red Lake Falls.

The City Council of the City of Red Lake Falls do ordain as follows:

Section I. The system of Water Works, together with the pump house, filter, tower and tank, water mains, hydrants, and all connections heretofore or now being constructed and erected, shall constitute the system of water works of said city, subject to such changes and additions as the Council shall from time to time see fit to make.

Section II. Superintendent, Duties, Etc.—The Superintendent of water works shall at all times have control and supervision of the city filter and of all water mains, tower and tank, hydrants, valves, machinery, tools and supplies used in connection with the city water works including the city pumping station. All connections with said water mains and the setting of all meters on such connections shall be under his supervision, he shall keep a complete record of all consumers of water from the City mains, shall have charge of the reading of all water meters and shall keep a complete log in which shall be kept daily records from midnight to midnight of the time of starting and stopping of pumps, number of revolutions, number of gallons pumped, water pressure, number of gallons feed water, oil in pints, and such other records as the city may require; the said log shall be prescribed and furnished by the City Council.

Section III. Rules and Regulations.—That the rules and regulations of the City water works be and the same are hereby established as follows:

Rule 1. Every person taking or using water from the city water works of said city shall comply with and abide by the following regulations:

Rule 2. Water rates shall be due and payable on the first day of each and every month, and if not paid a penalty shall accure and the water shall be turned off as hereinafter provided. In every case where water is turned off for non-payment, a penalty of $2.00 shall be added to the sum due and the water shall not be turned on until such sum and penalty is paid.

Rule 3. Applications for the introduction of water into any premises shall be made in writing to the superintendent of water works or City Council, giving the number of owner, name of occupant, description of property.

Rule 4. All pipes from main to meter shall forever be under the control of the city, the applicant waiving and releasing all claim thereto. The service pipe, stops and other fixtures must be laid and attached, kept in repair and protected from the frost by the applicant or consumer, and if in opening the street or property of whatsoever nature, the earth must be deposited in such a manner as to occasion the least inconvenience to the public, and be replaced in as good condition as previous to removal.

Rule 5. No consumer shall supply water to any other person or families, or suffer them to take it, except for use on the premises, without first having procured the written consent thereof of the superintendent of water works or City Council, under a penalty of Ten Dollars ($10.00) for each and every offense and the person so taking it shall be liable to the same penalty.

Rule 6. Every owner, tenant or occupant of any premises upon which there is service pipe, and every person taking water from the city, shall at all reasonable hours permit the superintendent, or agent or proper officer of the city, to enter his premises or buildings to examine the water pipe or fixtures therein, and turn off the water either inside or outside the buildings, whenever for any cause or purpose, he may desire to do so.

Rule 7. In all contracts with the city a gallon shall mean the standard gallon of 231 cubic inches.

Rule 8. No connection shall be made with any service pipe by any tenant, lessee or occupant of premises unless the owner or agent thereof shall in writing, request that such connection be made.

Rule 9. When the superintendent has turned off the water from any consumer it shall not be turned on or used unless by the order of the superintendent or City Council. Any person or persons violating this provision shall be liable to a penalty of not less than ten dollars ($10.00) nor more than Fifty Dollars ($50.00) for each and every offense.

Rule 10. It is hereby expressly provided that the city shall not be liable under any circumstances for a deficiency or failure in the supply of water, whether by the shutting off of the water to make repairs or connections, or for any other cause whatsoever.

Rule 11. The city reserves the right to change the rate for the use of water from time to time and at all times to make such other and further restrictions and rules in the use of water as the judgment of the City Council may deem necessary.

Rule 12. All persons taking water from the pipes of the City Water Works shall at all times be governed by the "Plumbers' Rules" adopted by the City Council, and those which may from time to time be adopted.

Rule 13. No water shall in any event be turned on until the applicant has a written permit for the same.

Rule 14. For violation of any of the foregoing rules and for the non-payment of rent, the City reserves the right to turn off the water without notice.

Rule 15. The "Plumbers' Rules" hereinafter set forth and such as may be hereinafter adopted, are and shall form a part of these rules and regulations.

Section IV. Opening Hydrants—Penalty. — No person shall open, interfere or tamper with any hydrant connected with the city water works, without permission of the superintendent of the water works, or chief of the Fire Department or City Council. Any violation of this section shall subject the offender to a fine of not less than Twenty-Five Dollars ($25.00) nor more than One Hundred Dollars ($100.00) for each offense, or to imprisonment in the county jail for not less than thirty days nor more than ninety days.

Section V. All meters used shall be "Trident Meters."

Section VI. Owner to furnish—All meters shall be furnished by the property owners and by each property owners installed on his premises under the supervision, control and direction of the superintendent of water works, in accordance with this ordinance, and all repairs on such meters shall be at the expense of the owners thereof.

Section VII. Setting Meters.—No person other than the superintendent of water works, or some competent person under his authority and control shall set or attach any meter to the water works system of the city, or to any main or service or other pipes connected or attached thereto.

Section VIII. Entering Premises.—That for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions hereof and for the purpose of inspecting and reading all meters under the provisions hereof, the superintendent of water works, or agent of the City Council is hereby authorized and empowered to go upon any premises and enter any building, room, cellarway, basement, or other portions thereof as may be necessary, taking with him all proper tools, implements, materials and assistance.

Section IX. The owner of private property, which property has upon it pipes connected with the City Water Works to convey water thereto, shall, as well as the lessee of the premises, be liable to the City for the rents or rates of all water used upon said premises, which may be recovered in an action against such owner, lessee or occupant, or against any or all of them.

Section X. Water Rates, When Payable.—Penalty.—All charges for water furnished during the month shall be due and payable at the City Clerk's office on the first day of the succeeding month, and if not paid on or before the 15th day of such month, the water may in the discretion of the superintendent or city council be turned off and if so turned off the service shall not be renewed or the water turned on until all arrearages are paid including the sum of Two Dollars ($2.00) as recompense for the turning on and off of the water. At any time when the charges for water furnished to any property may be in arrear more than the period of fifteen (15) days the superintendent of water works or city council is hereby directed to refuse to turn on the water or connect such premises with the water works system until after all the arrearages of charges shall have been paid, including the sum of Two Dollars ($2.00) charges for turning the water on and off. This Section shall not be construed as in any way affecting the personal liability of the owner of the property or the tenant in possession of the same or the consumer of water; but is further remedy provided to enforce the collection of any and all arrearages of such charges.

Section XI. Meter Rates and Flat Rates.—That the meter rates and flat rates for the payment of water furnished by the City shall be as follows, to-wit:

Meter Rate

For the first two thousand gallons or fraction thereof, sixty cents per one thousand gallons.

For the next three thousand gallons or fraction thereof, fifty cents for one thousand gallons.

For the next five thousand gallons or fraction thereof, forty-five cents per one thousand gallons.

For the second ten thousand gallons, or fraction thereof, forty cents per one thousand gallons.

For the third ten thousand gallons, or fraction thereof, thirty-five cents per one thousand gallons.

For the fourth ten thousand gallons, or fraction thereof, thirty-five cents per one thousand gallons.

For the fifth ten thousand gallons, or fraction thereof, twenty-five cents per one thousand gallons.

For all quantities in excess of fifty thousand gallons at the rate of twenty cents per thousand gallons.

The City of Red Lake Falls shall pay annually for each fire hydrant installed and ready for use the sum of Thirty-five Dollars ($35.00).

Section XII. Meters—How Connected.—After any service pipe connected with the City water works system has been placed and laid in the property line and made ready for using water therefrom, before meters are used, they shall be installed on such service pipe as follows:

First, and between the meter and the water main, at a place convenient to be got at, a stop cock, then the meter and then a stop and waste cock, such connections must be supplied with a similar stop and waste cock. All such stop cocks and stop and waste cocks shall be of brass properly connected.

Section XIII. Penalty.—Any plumber or other person who shall connect or re-connect any meter with the water works system of the city in any manner other than that above prescribed shall be deemed guilty of an offense of which he may be fined a sum of Ten dollars ($10.00), and the owner of any property who by himself or his agent, servant or employe permits any meter on his property to remain connected in any manner except as above prescribed is hereby declared to be guilty of an offense for which he may be fined One Dollar ($1.00) and each and every day any meter is allowed to remain connected except as herein provided for after notice of that fact shall constitute a separate offense.

Section XIV. Plumbers.—Any person, plumbers or other persons desiring to do work in connection with the city water works system or drains, shall have a place of business in said city, shall furnish the City with a good and sufficient bond in the sum of One Thousand Dollars ($1,000.00), approved by the City Council, to protect, indemnify and save harmless the city from any and all loss, claim, suit or damages, direct or consequential, the said city may sustain by reason of the violation of any rules or regulations that may be in force after having filed said bond.

The City Clerk shall, on receipt of Twenty Five Dollars ($25.00) issue to said plumber or other person a license permitting him to do work on any and all pipes connecting with the city mains, under and pursuant to all rules and regulations then in force. The City Council reserving the right to revoke and annul the license in case of any violation of the rules and regulations governing the management of the City water works. Said bond and license must be renewed every two (2) years.

Section XV. Plumbers' Rules.—Rule 1. Before performing any work, the plumbers must have a permit from the superintendent of water works and plumbing or City Clerk and within twenty-four hours after having completed the work, must return the permit to said officers, with a report of the work in exact accordance with the facts.

Rule 2. All service pipe extending from the water main to the inside of any building within said city shall be of lead or standard galvanized pipe, and where galvanized pipe is used lead goose necks shall be used in connecting to the water mains. No connection to corporation cocks shall be allowed which are less than one-eighth inch bore, and no copper or composition cock of less than five-eighths inch shall be allowed. A brass coupling must be used for connecting the lead pipe with iron pipe, and in no case must lead be connected into iron. All solder joints in service pipes must be wiped joints.

Rule 3. All service pipes must be laid at least seven feet below the surface of the ground, and be kept in good repair at the expense of the owner. In order that the city may control the flow of water through such pipes there must be placed on each and every service pipe a brass stop cock of the following description, viz: A. H. Mueller Manufacturing Company's inverted key cock, Minneapolis pattern, double union connections, with ground joints. Said stop cock shall be located inside the curb and as near thereto as practicable, and must be connected with a cast iron extension stop box, the stand pipe of which shall not be less than two inches in diameter, and shall be protected. Should it become necessary to dig out said box for the purpose of turning the water on and off, the water taker will be required to stand the expense of the same.

Rule 4. When the plumbing is completed the plumbers will, within 24 hours, return the permit to the office of the superintendent of water works and plumbing or City Clerk and within said up, showing exactly what he has done, and kind of material used.

Rule 5. It is expressly understood that the superintendent or City Council reserve the right at any time to shut off the water in the main pipe for the purpose of repairing the same, making connections or extensions to the same, or for the purpose of cleansing the same. "Provided, that, in all cases of shutting off the water which the water is to be shut off," and it is expressly understood that the city shall be made against the superintendent or city by reason of the breaking of any service pipe or service cock, or from any damages arising from shutting off water for repairing, laying or relaying mains, hydrants or other connections; and also reserve the right to make such further rules and regulations as may be necessary for the preservation, protection and character of this work.

Rule 6. Any failure to comply with these rules or to leave the street in good condition will cause the license of any plumber to be revoked or suspended at the direction of the superintendent or the Council.".

Section XVI. This ordinance shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage, approval and publication.

I hereby approve the within ordinance this 12th day of November, 1913.

I. LEMIEUX, Mayor.

Approved:—T. A. GROMPE,
President of the Council.

For the lack of a pencil the plan was lost; for the lack of a plan the crop was lost; for the lack of a crop the farm was lost; for the lack of a profit the team was lost; for the lack of a team the work fell behind and the taxes at hand at last came due, and up they piled, and the interest too; and the cattle and horses and sheep and swine, and barn and the house and the grove so fine, and the farm itself where the years of toil had knit one's heart to the very soil, was sold for the debt that could not be paid because of the lack of a pencil.—Farm, Stock and Home.

In some parts of the country as the holiday season approaches it is customary for the farmers living along the rural routes to remember the mail carrier with gifts intended to make the mail men or his good horses happy. Sometimes it's a case of ease for the horses and sometimes it is something for consumption or use by the man who does the driving. Fred Pergeau, one of the newer farmers in Red Lake county, no doubt comes from a part of the country where the generous habit prevails. John Kelzenhein, carrier on Route No. 1, was recently agreeably surprised to find a sack of flour at Mr. Perpoet's mail box, the package being intended for the carrier and not for anyone getting mail there. There is no doubt that being remembered in that substantial manner will make the carrier warm on the cold winter drives.

Ideal Length For Sermon.

What is the ideal length for a sermon? The question is raised by Dean Hole in his "Memoirs." By way of illustration he tells a story of a shepherd's complaint who had once asked a bishop what was the proper length of a sermon. "Well, twenty minutes," was the answer, "with a glass running by the side of mercy." That is good advice, and, by the way, it is advice which Queen Victoria would have heartily approved. In 1857 the queen presented a pulpit gown to the Chapel Royal, Savoy, and it was stated that every eighteen minutes there was a pause, the taking the hint. If you wanted to please the queen you stopped preaching at eighteen minutes.

FINE PROGRESS ON SCHOOL HOUSE

WITH FAVORABLE WEATHER WORK ON WALLS IS PROGRESSING RAPIDLY.

The very favorable weather conditions have made possible excellent progress with the work on the new public school building now in the course of construction and Contractors Brody and Johnson now hope to have the building enclosed before the freeze-up comes.

On two sides at the building the brick walls are to the top of the windows of the second story of the building and on the other sides the brick layers are working on the second story of the building. As the brick work progresses carpenters are getting in the frame work and by the time the roof is on they will be engaged with the work of finishing the interior.

The work has progressed far enough to indicate that the new school house is to be a handsome, well built and finely proportioned structure.

HOW TO AVOID THE AUTOMOBILE SACK.

"The automobile is coming into such general use that every motorist is the users is of general interest. A great many people, in cranking their cars, sprain their backs or "drop a stitch" and if this is once started it happens more easily afterwards," says the editor of the Journal of the American Medical association. "Many people, after riding for any length of time, are fixed in the back when they get out. If, this is kept up, the pain or weakness increases, and sometimes the person is laid up with what is called lumbago or rheumatism. Both of these conditions are commonly due to the wrong way of using the muscles of the back. In cranking, keep the back straight. Don't use the cranman's back." Bend from the hips snapping the crank over by straightening the knees and hips, but do not bend at the middle, or the waistline. In sitting in the car keep the back straight also. Get the hips well back against the back of the seat, and, if the upholstery make the shoulders droop, put a robe, a cushion, a book, or anything at the hollow of the back to prevent this. Do not stretch in the seat and sit on the lower part of the spine. This reverses the normal curve of the spine and must cause strain, which at times much crippling."

POTATO STORAGE.

Store Only Healthy Tubers. Keep Cellar Cool and Dry.

Two distinct types of storage rot may occur on potatoes. Both are very common in Minnesota. The injury may become a relative matter with a dry rot in which case it gradually shrivels up, becomes powdery and changes to a light brownish color or a soft rot may occur in which the tuber is rapidly reduced to a soft foul-smelling mass.

The organisms causing these rots attack the potatoes either through wounds or following the attack of the wilt fungus. Primary infection may occur in the field and spread to healthy potatoes when the latter are placed under improper storage conditions.

It is important therefore to reject all tubers showing any signs of rot at digging time, and to provide a dry, well ventilated cellar for storage. A storage cellar that is warm and moist is very favorable for the rapid growth of the rot inducing organisms.

The temperature of the storage cellar should be kept as close to 35 degrees Fahrenheit as possible.

Great care should be taken to avoid bruising the potatoes in digging and handling.—A. G. Tolaas, Assistant Bacteriology, University Farm, St. Paul.

Old World Canals.

China has led the world in the matter of canal making and to day she still stands first among the nations for the skillful utilization of her inland waterways. One great canal in China connects the network of rivers between Peking and Canton, a distance of 1,000 miles, and the total extent of the canals of China is over 5,000 miles. Russia comes the longest canal to the world, extending from St. Petersburg to the Chinese frontier, a distance of 4,472 miles. Since the second longest, covering 1,634 miles, between Archangel and St. Petersburg. As regards numbers of separate canals Holland has the preeminence, but her total mileage of inland waterways is only 630 miles.

Shaw Dissented.

Mr. George Bernard Shaw was once lecturing in London on the benefits of socialism. At the close of his lecture he said he would be glad to answer any questions that any member of the audience might care to put to him.

A man rose in the middle of the hall. "I should just like to ask you one thing, Mr. Shaw," he said. "Don't you think that those huge incomes one hears of are all wrong? Don't you think that there should be a law passed to prevent any man having more than a thousand a year?"

"Certainly not!" Mr. Shaw exclaimed promptly. "Why, I make more than a thousand a year myself!"—London Globe.

WHERE THERE'S A WILL

CHAPTER I

When it was all over Mr. Sam came out to the spring-house to say goodby to me before he and Miss Jane left. I hated to see him go, after all we had been through together, and I suppose he saw it in my face, for he came over close and stood looking down at me, and smiling. "You saved us, Minnie," he said, "and I needn't tell you we're grateful; but do you know what I think?" he asked, rubbing his long forefinger up and down. "I think you've enjoyed it even when you were suffering most. Redbird went over there to intrigue, as the sparks fly upward."

"Enjoyed it!" I snapped. "I'm an old woman before my time, Mr. Sam. What with trailing back and forward through the snow to the shelter-house, and not getting to bed at all some nights, and my heart going by fits and starts, so you may say, and half a dozen my spinal marrow fairly chilled, not to mention putting on my own shoes every morning from force of habit and having to take them off again, I'm about old enough!"

"It's been the making of you, Minnie," he said, eyeing me, with his hands on his pockets. "Look at your cheeks! Look at your disposition! I don't believe you'd stab anybody in the back now!"

"That was a joke, of course; I never stabbed anybody in the back.)

He opened the door and a blast of February wind rattled the window-frames. Mr. Sam threw out his chest and under his sweater and waved me another good-by.

"We'll, I'm off, Minnie," he said. "Take care of yourself and don't sit too much on the job; leave to me a part of it, to oddle."

"Good-by, Mr. Sam!" I called, putting down Miss Patty's dolly and following him to the door; "goodby; but we have something before you start to keep you warm."

He turned at the corner of the path and grinned back at me.

"All right," he called. "I'll go down to the bar and get a lettuce sand-wich!"

Then he was gone, and happy as I was, I knew I would miss him terribly.

* * * * *

It began when the old doctor died. I suppose you have heard of Hope Springs Sanatorium and the mineral spring that made it famous.

I have been spring-house girl at Hope Sanatorium for fourteen years. For the first year or so I really wasn't crazy. Then I found things were coming my way. I've got the kind of mind that never forgets a name or face and can continue them properly, which I can't common. And when folks came back I could call them at once. The old doctor used to say I was worth as much as an asset to the sanatorium.

His was in the habit of coming to the spring-house every day to get his morning glass of water and read the papers. For a good many years it had been his custom to sit there, in the winter by the wood fire and in summer in front inside the open door, and to read off the headings aloud while I dozed around the spring and polished glasses.

All that winter, with the papers full of rumors that Miss Patty Jennings was going to marry a prince, we'd followed it by the spring-house fire, the old doctor and I, getting angry at the American emperor for opposing it when we knew how much good Miss Patty was for any foreigner, and chuckling with glasses and fussed when he read that the prince's mother was in favor of the match and he might go through. Miss Patty and her father came every winter to Hope Springs and I couldn't have been more cautious about it if she had been my own sister.

Well, as I say, it all began the very day the old doctor died. He stamped out to the spring-house with the morning paper about one o'clock, and the wedding seemed to be all off. The paper said the emperor had definitely refused the match and had sent the prince, who was his cousin, for a Japanese cruise while the Jennings family was going to Mexico in their private car. The old doctor was ineligible, and I remember how he tramped up and down the spring-house, muttering that the girl had had a lucky escape, and what did the emperor expect! Beauty and youth and wealth weren't enough. But he calmed down, and soon he was reading that the papers were predicting an early spring, and he said we'd better begin to increase our sulphur percentage in the water.

"By the way," he remarked, "Mr. Richard will be along in a day or so, Minnie. You'd better break it to Mrs. Wiggins."

Since the summer before we'd had to break Mr. Richard's name to Mrs. Wiggins, the housekeeper, owing to his finding her Satan Cast Down at last blown out of the window, having been hung up to dry, and his wearing it to luncheon as whiskers. Mr. Dick was the old doctor's grandson.

"Humph!" I said, and he turned around and looked square at me.

"He's a good boy at heart, Minnie," he said. "We've had our troubles with him, you and I, but everything has been quiet lately."

"I'm not objecting to Mr. Dick coming here, am I? Only don't expect me to hurst into song about it. Shut the door behind you when you go out."

But he didn't go at once. He stood watching me polish glasses and get the card-tables ready, and I knew he still had something on his mind.

"What has Mr. Dick been up to now?" I asked, growing suspicious.

"Nothing. But I'm an old man, Minnie, a very old man."

"Stuff and nonsense," I exclaimed, alarmed. "You're only seventy."

"And if" he went on, "anything happens to me, Minnie, I'm counting on you to do what you can for the old place. You've been here a good many years, Minnie."

"Fourteen years I have been, telling you water set this spring," I said, "and for to hope you'll live many years more I wouldn't be at home any place else, unless it would be to an asylum. But don't ask me to stay here if I had baby Mr. Dick call the old place for a summer hotel. For that's what he'll do."

"He won't call it," declared the old doctor firmly. "All I want is for you to promise to stay."

"Oh, I'll stay," I said. "I won't promise to be agreeable, but I'll stay. Somebody'll have to look after the spring; I reckon Mr. Dick thinks it comes out of the bath just as we sell it, with the whole pharmacopoeia in it!"

Well, it made the old doctor happier, and I'm sorry I promised, but I've got a joint on my right foot that tells me when it is going to rain or I am going to have bad luck, and it gave a jump then. I might have known I was in trouble ahead!

It was pretty quiet in the spring-house for the rest of that day and the next. I drew a chair in front of the fire and wondered what it would do if the old doctor died, and what a fool I'd been not to be a school-teacher, and what I studied for, and I was thinking to myself bitterly that all the misfortunes in the world seemed to me for was to be a mermaid, who I sometimes thought was sliding down my path, and it turned out to be Tillie, the cook.

She slammed the door behind her and threw the Finleyville evening paper in my lap.

"There!" she said, "I've won a cahn of toilet soap from Hutchinson's store. The emperor's consented."

"Never!" I gasped, and snatched the paper. There was right across the front page that I sat down and read it through, and there was Miss Patty's picture in an oval and the prince's in another, with a turned-up mustache and his hand on the handle of his sword, and between them both was the Austrian emperor.

Well, I sat there and thought it over, Miss Patty, of Miss Patricia, being so to speak, a friend of mine. They'd come to the spring every winter for years.

So my wash-stand drawer I'd kept all the clippings about her coming to Hope Springs in the winter she spent in Washington and was presented and engaged in the president's ma, and the engagement article that told how Mr. Jennings had got his money by robbing widows and orphans, and showed the little frame house where Miss Patty was born—as if she'd had anything to do with it. And to end up it was cutting out the picture of her and Mr. Jennings and the article underneath which told how many castles they had, and I don't mind saying that I was sniffling a little bit, for I couldn't get used to the idea. And suddenly the door closed softly and there was a rustle behind me. When I turned it was Miss Patty herself. She saw the clipping immediately, and her cheeks and lashes got red.

"You, too," she said. "And we've been on this distance to get away from just that."

"Well, I shan't talk about it," I replied, not holding out my hand, for with her, so to speak, next door to being a princess—but she leaned right over and kissed me. I could hardly believe it.

"What's Mr. Dick Been Up to Now?"

"Why won't you talk about it?" she insisted, catching me by the shoulders and shaking at it. "Minnie, your eyes are as red as your hair!"

"I don't approve of it," I said. "You might as well know it now as later, Miss Patty. I don't believe in a man's marriages. I had a cousin that married a Jew, and what with him making the children promise to be good on the Talmud and her trying to raise them Episcopal, the poor things had to be raised without up that it's pitiful."

"But we're not going to stop," she said laughing when he got to the door. "Mamma!" he repeated, with his hand on the knob. Minnie, the old place will be under the hammer in three years, and if you know what's good for you, you'll call in under the new management, which there's a vacancy."

"If I were you," I said, looking him straight in the eye, "I wouldn't plan out any new carpets yet, Mr. Theburn, I predicted the color of the old ones for six years."

"So you're actually going to fight it out," he said, grinning. "Well, the odds are in your favor. You are two to my one."

"I think it's pretty even," I retorted, "with the advantage on my side, for having certain principles of honor and honesty. You have no backing."

He tried to think of a retort, and not finding one he slammed out of the spring-house in a rage.

Mr. Van Alstyne and his wife came in that same day, and Mrs. Van Alstyne and we played three-handed bridge for half an hour. As I've said, they'd been on their honeymoon, and they were both sulky at starting in to stay at Hope Springs.

"You're Getting Careless," Minnie, He Said, Squinting at It.

After the first rubber Mrs. Van Alstyne threw her cards on the floor and said another day like this would drive her.

She turned her back to her husband, but he pretended not to notice it, and bath at the back of her neck up under her hair showed red. I'm sorry to say I stooped to gather up the cards he kicked to the floor.

"Listen," he said, "there's a scream of a play down at Finleyville to-night called 'Sweet Home.' It's got a cyclone and the bishop went down last night, and they've got in the worst to twenty years. Put on a black veil and let's go all crazy and see it."

I think she agreed to do it, but that night after dinner, Amanda King, who had charge of the linen-closet, told me the sheriff had closed the open-house at 2311, the building woman was sick at the hotel.

"They say she looked funny last night," Amanda finished, "and I guess she's got the mumps."

My joint gave a throb at that minute.

Mr. Sam wasn't taking any chances for the next day he went to the city himself to bring Mr. Dick up.

Mr. Dick arrived about the morning of the sixth day, but he wired his wife from Chicago that he'd be back on the way. But we met every train with a sleigh, Mrs. Dick didn't come, I was uneasy, knowing Mr. Dick, and Mrs. Sam was worried, too.

It had been a cold, hard day for a day of so, and at eleven o'clock that day Mrs. Sam and Miss Jane and Mr. Sam went down to the path to the spring-house.

"Minnie," he said, "I'm worried. I've been married for a day of so, and at eleven o'clock that day Mrs. Van Alstyne's I said mildly. "But he must be here," he said. "I've got to get on the train myself yesterday, and would wait until I started to be sure he was off."

"Stirring!"

"No. Standing. What the deuce, Minnie—"

"Waving out the window to you?" I suggested, and Mrs. Richard Van Alstyne testily. "He was raising the window for a girl in the next seat."

"Precisely!" I said. "Would you have the girl wait enough to trace her?"

"That's ridiculous, you know," he said, trying to be polite to me of a thousand-and-one things that may have detained him—"

"Only one, thing, over Catalina Mr. Dick, that always detained him," I said solemnly. "That's a girl. You're a newcomer in the family, Mr. Van Alstyne; you don't remember the time he went down here to the station to see his Aunt Agatha off to the city, and we found him three weeks later in Oklahoma trying to marry a widow with five children."

"I'll have to tell my wife," he said

"Who's running the place, anyhow? You?"
"Not—exactly," I explained, "but, of course, when anything comes up that's out of my line, housekeeper, I refer to the head of the house doctor's office."
"Gone! Who's looking after the patients?"
"Why, most of them have been here before," I explained, "and I know their troubles—" the kind of baths and all that."
"Oh, you know the treatments!" he said, eyeing me. "And why did the house doctor go?"
He ordered Mr. Moody to take his spring water bot. Mr. Moody's spring water has been ordered off for eleven years, and I refused to change. It was between the doctor and me, Mr. Van Alstyne.
"Oh, of course," he said, "it is a matter of principle, and I'm glad you're the hat and looked at his watch.
"The wreck!" she cried, "the baby fat everywhere! Oh, and my dinner! Is enough! I suppose he'll have to come, now, whether he's had time to bathe or he sees any one else."
Just then the bishop brought his glass over to the spring.
"Good time, Minnie," he said. "Do you know I'm getting the mineral-water habit, Patty? I'm afraid plain water pretty tasteless for me after this."
He got his hand over here on the rail. They were old friends, the bishop and I, which was natural.
"Bishop," she said suddenly, "will you do something for me?"
"Why, certainly, Patty." He was very fond of Miss Patty, was the bishop.
"Then—to-night, not later than eight o'clock, mind—will you go to Finleyville with you? And keep him in the card room until—"
"Why, certainly!" he said, pretending to be very serious. "Patty, Patty, you'd be the death of me yet. Is thy servant a dog that he should do this thing?"
"Certainly not," said Miss Patty. "Just a dear, allright bald, but still Methodist shed over!"
"There will be plenty of slaves to love your Ruth and Naomi when I am going, my child," he said. "Sometimes I think, Minnie, women and rest-bodies here at home—but I dare say it will turn out surprisingly well as it is."
"Bishop," I said, as he stood, "I'm going to be very serious." "Patty, Patty, you'd be the death of me yet. Is thy servant a dog that he should do this thing?"
"Certainly not," said Miss Patty. "Just a dear, allright bald, but still Methodished

FIGHTING A FOREST FIRE

FORMING A TRENCH FRONT WHICH TO FIGHT FOREST FIRE.

BURNING THE "CLEAN" TO PREVENT FIRES

SWEPT BY FOREST FIRE

BELT DOWN FIRE FRONTIER FROM FIRE.

HOW THE RESTORATION IS DONE IN BURNED DISTRICTS

FOREST fires! There is something awe-inspiring and terrible in the very thought of them. You may never have traveled hours, on a railway train, through the choking smoke. You may never have seen the light of a blazing forest. Yet, though you have not come as near as this to a forest fire, the words carry a feeling of danger and of tremendous might for evil.

It is hard for the average layman to realize how fires can assume such magnitude in territory supposed to be under supervision of men appointed for the particular purpose of preventing fires, but the fact is quite readily comprehended by those who have had occasion to travel through some of the remote and inaccessible regions within the national forests. As a matter of fact, the lands withdrawn as national forests are almost entirely of a rugged, mountainous nature. Necessarily, these are large and comparatively open portions included, particularly in the rouge country, but instances point to the fact that the sections subject to the most severe fires are invariably those of the most rugged and inaccessible nature, made up of high, steep mountains, covered with a dense forest and heavy undergrowth. Many places are, in their present condition, practically inaccessible, and while they are being opened up as rapidly as funds will permit of trails being built, yet there is so much area, on many other districts as regarded of the forest officers and the funds mentioned are so limited and inadequate that progress at such work, while keeping pace with the available resources, is necessarily slow.

Before enlarging upon conditions under which large fires begin, it might be well to mention briefly a few of the forest fire terms with which the layman frequently meets and may not understand.

Forest fires are classified generally as crown or top fires—those where the fire travels through the tops of the trees with surprising rapidity and working disastrous results; and ground or surface fires, where the fire travels along the ground, consuming soil covers or humus, brush and litter, seedlings and often small trees, and, consequently, doing little or no damage to the mature timber. Luckily, in most cases forest fires are ground fires and it is these that are the most quickly controlled. Yet a single tap fire can cause vastly more damage than a whole number of ground fires. However, it is generally under normal conditions that crown or top fires occur—such as high winds, very hot, dry, steep country and severe drought, when such conditions can in an incredibly short time change a creeping ground fire into a sweeping crown fire, leaving a path of ruin and destruction in its wake. In brief, drought and wind are the two dominant conditions favorable to severe fires. The wind is always the most dreaded factor during the fire season, its freshnesses and uncertainty upsetting the best of plans. So fierce was the wind at the time of the destructive fires of 1910 that whole hillsides of timber were uprooted and men were forced out of their saddles. The fire leaped across river half a mile wide at a single bound, traveling nearly a mile a minute at times and devouring everything in its path. Office and cabins were spanned as by a great jump, the fire continuing on the opposite side and leaving the canyon timber ground not scathed. Numerous instances of the absolute freakishness of the fires could be cited, and all tend to show this is very uncertainty.

In fighting a fire there is constructed around the burning area what is called a fire line or trench. This consists of clearing away all debris and brush, generally for a width of four feet, though wider when conditions allow or warrant it, and exposing the mineral soil for one or two feet or wider as necessary. An ordinary ground fire, unfanned by a strong wind, will die out on reaching the strip of mineral soil, often as effectually as if the line were a stream of water. When the fire is burning slowly and men can stand the heat and smoke, it is always desirable to build the trench close to the fire so as to prevent its gaining momentum as it progresses, but where the fire is traveling quite rapidly, often the fire line has to be placed some distance away from the fire, and where adequate patrol or supervision is assured the burned material on the inside of the line is fired in order to meet the advancing fire and destroy the inflammable material in its path. Backfiring, as this is called, is generally used only in an emergency and by experienced hands. Often, of course, when the fire is severe, strips of timber for variable distances are cleared, but in the ordinary ground fire such work is usually too slow and unnecessary.

The best tools used by a fire-fighting crew in the mountains are axes, shovels and mattocks or grub hoes, the hoes being usually in general proportion and most effective. Often one ax two crosscut saws are used, particularly where the fire is traveling through a lot of down timber. The saws are generally go first, clearing out and cutting away the heavy stuff along the line, then fellow the grub hoe ax mattock men, breaking through the heavy and soft roots, and last the shovel men, who clean out the trail, or, as might be stated, put the finishing touches on the work of the others. The amount of work a gang of men can do depends upon various circumstances, such as the extent of the country, tools available, etc., but roughly it might be said that a gang of twenty men can build a mile of line a day.

Aside from a few general principles there are no set rules for fighting forest fires—in fact, it is far from a block-and-white proposition. Rather, it calls into play all faithfulness and bushwork, and the result attained bears more evidence of the success or failure of the supervising officer, although always it must be remembered that that uncertain and unpredictable factor, the wind, can snatch victory from the hands of men most quickly and easily as to make it seem sometimes a veritable mockery of his efforts. And, too, the unbelievable action of fire, even when apparently under control, makes it absolutely necessary that it be watched closely and continuously until there is not a single remaining vestige of its existence.

Among the principal causes of forest fires are locomotive sparks, lightning, camp fires left unextinguished, burning of slash in clearing land, logging operations—principally from fire in the resultant slash accumulated by the average logger in cutting over an area. There are minor other ways, such as incendiarism, ashes from a pipe, a lighted cigar or cigarette stub or lighted match cast thoughtlessly aside. The first three mentioned, however, are the most general.

When a fire has once assumed the proportions of a large top fire, it is generally inadvisable to attempt to check it; rather, it is a good judgment to consider the safety of the fire fighters themselves, so that they may be in readiness to attack the fire when it again leaves the tops of the trees and assumes its slower progress along the ground.

It might be mentioned right here that forest fires, with particular reference to ground fires, do not always destroy standing timber, but often only the very small trees, brush and surface cover on the ground. Potential timber, of course, has a distinct value, and the destruction of a good soil cover is a decided detriment to the forest, but many trees, such as Douglas fir, tamarack and yellow pine, have a thick, heavy bark which forms a good resistance to fire and will often withstand a periodic ground fires for years. Other trees with thin bark, of course, succumb quite readily.

In the report of the secretary of agriculture, embodied in the Yearbook of the department of agriculture for 1910, he states that "the fires of the calendar year 1910 covered more than 3,000,000 acres of government timberland and 860,000 acres of private timberland, not within the national forest boundaries, and inflicted damage on national forest timber, including young growth, estimated at a little less than $26,000,000. The loss in timber destroyed or damaged was slightly over $10,000,000 for the national forests . . . In fighting the fires, special expenditures were incurred totalling over $1,000,000, besides the cost in time of the regular ranger protective force." In addition to this, there was an added toll of 78 human lives lost in fighting the fires and a large number injured, to say nothing of many ranchers, settlers, prospectors, etc., who perished. Altogether, it certainly puts the fire season of 1910 down as one of the country's great catastrophies, to be listed with the great Chicago fire in Minnesota in 1894, which did such devastation.

One notable forest fire battle was fought by a serious conflagration in a most heroic, systematic and systematic work of the firemen fighting to subdue the flames. Here they are but minutes away from the source of the fire, with speedy conveyances for reaching it and every possible assistance of human ingenuity to control the fire.

Compare this with the many obstacles with which the forest fire-fighter has to contend. Sometimes he is more than a day's journey from the fire. He has a limited and often inexperienced crew to help him. He must travel on foot or on horseback, and he cannot lope along as they do in the city parks—certainly trails are not made for loping horses. He must rely on packhorses for conveying necessary supplies, because it may mean many days of hard work ahead of him on the burning area. Very often, indeed, he must blaze his way a number of miles through a trailless wilderness, carrying his bed and grub on his back, and through a country where every step seems a greater impediment to rapid progress; and when he reaches the fire it may be of such proportions as to appall a less sturdy nature.

The rapidity with which fire can spread in the mountains is almost unbelievable. For instance, in 1910, by the middle of August over 3,000 small fires had been put out by patrolmen and over 90 large fires had been brought under control by crews of from 25 to 150 men. And yet, when the crudes of August 20 came, in which it was all undone so quickly as to make one gasp of wonder and awe. Within 48 hours a strip of country more than 100 miles long and from 30 to 50 miles wide had been burned over. And still the fires were spreading. Against this huge army of more than 3,000 men fought persistently and courageously and with the utmost skill, at overwhelming odds, yet never did they falter until the rains came.

In passing, it is but fitting to give credit to the brave men in the government's employ, who risked and lost their lives in earnest endeavors to carry out their duties, and many are the tales of heroism and unselfish devotion during those strenuous times, when men toiled and struggled shoulder to shoulder.

Men can and will, in the course of time, make effort to reforest the great devastated areas, but the scope of years to come will be required for broad indeed. Man's best work now and for always lies in the prevention of the occurrence of such calamities as have gone before. Intelligent man can compel the railroads to use contrivances to prevent sparks from leaving the engines; he can educate campers into the necessity for their exercising due precautions with fire (a truly little thing, yet big in results) and enact a severe penalty for failure to abide by the law; he can appropriate more money for the movement and protection work, to place the forests under closer supervision, and he can make more accessible, so that the fires caused by lightning can be fought, and he can enact wise legislation; but mostly, he must enlist the cooperation of all his fellowmen to help in the great work of preserving and perpetuating the forests because they represent a source of wealth and necessity to us, not to any single individual, but one in which every member of our country is interested, and who, directly or indirectly, a participant, even unto our children's children, a beneficiary.

GREAT MEN SEEN IN FICTION

Some Way They Never Seem to Measure Up to Standard Which We Have Set.

The fact that Mr. Maurice Hewlett made Byron the hero of his novel, "Bendish"—Bendish is Byron—raises the question why great men seldom make good heroes or even good minor characters in fiction. Disraeli brought both Byron and Shelley into his "Venetia," and wrote poetry for them; but the book is not one of his best, and the verse is not his best verse, by far. Tolstoy, when he brings Napoleon into his "War and Peace," goes to the other extreme. He is so determined not to be impressed by him, and so angry with the Napoleonic legends, that he turns him into a bore who can talk about nothing but his own exploits and who takes it for granted that every one wonders at him as much as he wonders at himself. His Napoleon, in fact, is a pretext and a satire; and he is also an artistic mistake, for he distracts our attention from the story to the controversy implied by Tolstoy's treatment of him. We want to agree with Tolstoy himself instead of listening to what he has to tell us.

NEW YORK A CITY OF FLATS

First Modern Apartment House Built 43 Years Ago.

Rutherford Stuyvesant Got the Idea From Paris and Other Realty Owners Took It Up—Bring Very High Rentals Now.

New York.—It might have been centuries instead of forty-three years since the first apartment house was erected in this city, so great has been the improvement in this popular type of dwelling. Rutherford Stuyvesant, a member of the old Stuyvesant family, was the first to introduce the apartment in this country. He had seen apartments in Paris. They were popular there with the best of people. Besides, it increased the ability of the owner to pay the tax bills and other expenses.

The tax problem interested Mr. Stuyvesant, as he owned considerable property about the city. Probably this was the reason for his interest in Paris apartment houses. After considerable thought he decided to build one in New York, he erected the Rotherford, at 142 East Eighteenth street, soon after the Civil war. It was known as the French flats, and was the talk of the town. The Rotherford Stuyvesant house is still standing, and according to brokers, has comparatively few vacancies. It is five stories high, 112 feet wide and ninety-two feet deep. There are four apartments of seven rooms each on a floor. It has steam heat and hot water and is absolutely soundproof.

The reception that met the apartment house was so great that many builders entered the apartment house field. Of late years the number has increased considerably. These buildings are being given the construction all but apartment houses, which has led to a reduction requiring greater attention and application. Through this specializing New York has been forced in the last ten years into the front rank as the apartment center of the world.

Many of our apartments have rival palaces in grandeur and fittings. Scores of such houses may be found on Park avenue, Fifth avenue, Madison avenue, Broadway, West End avenue, Riverside drive and crosstown streets to the east and west of Central park. A private dwelling fitted out to be a modern one of the kind in houses along these streets would rent for figures equal to the sum that would be asked for these apartments. Many families have learned this and are giving up costly dwellings to live in apartment houses, in which they are relieved of nothing except the bother of the dwelling, yet are saving several thousand dollars a year by the change, enough in many cases to maintain the latest in motor cars.

Rents have increased, but the great improvement that has been made in apartment houses warrants this increase. In other words, the increase in rents has not been as great as the increase made in the construction and appointment of these houses.

Instead of one, two and six-teenth street there is not an apartment house where a suite can be had for less than $15 a room. In many of the best apartment houses $30 a room is nothing unusual. Apartments of two and three rooms bring comparatively more rent than the large suites. $30 a room being the lowest rental for a small apartment, and that is bad for. They run as high as $60 and $70 a room. In some of the expensive small suite apartments in the west of Park avenue and on the side streets along the west side, $75 a room is often received. Up to two years ago there were kitchenettes attached to small suite apartments. This year builders have not been permitted to build kitchenettes, instead miniature kitchens have been introduced.

Park avenue has usurped the honor of being the leading apartment street of the city. It is only a few years since builders of apartments gave no attention to the east side of the city. All their operations were along Broadway, Riverside drive and West End avenue. It is only a few years since the first apartment house was erected in Park avenue, yet most of the blocks on the east side of the avenue from Fifty-second to Eighty-third street are lined now with tall apartments, which are said to be the best in the city. Though Park avenue is considered the leading apartment house avenue in the city, rentals there are not exorbitant—in fact, apartments in new buildings may be got to fit almost any purse. Six rooms and two baths can be had for $1,700 a year. Suites can be had even for less rent than this. From $1,700 rents range gradually to $10,000, which is about the highest rental paid on the avenue. This rent is obtained in the seventeen story apartment at Seventy-ninth street. Prices in this house are from $9,000 to $10,000.

About two blocks away, at the corner of Fifth avenue and Eighty-first street, as high as $6,000 a year may be paid for apartments. This probably is the highest-priced apartment house in the world.

West End avenue has become the scene of most of the apartment house building on the west side since last season. Half a dozen fine houses have been erected there.

SOUNDED JUST LIKE SNEEZE

A Story From San Francisco About a Former Corporal of Impossible Name.

San Francisco.—Corp. Mieczyslaw Smialowski, quartermaster corps, Fort Grebie, R. I., war department artist to be a name has just been discharged from the army by purchase, which reminds one that Corp. Mieczyslaw Smialowski formerly served in the quartermaster corps at the Presidio of San Francisco under Maj. E. J. Hampton.

One day Major Hampton had a bad cold and started a sneezing spell that Sergt Corporal Mieczyslaw went into Major Hampton's office about ten times and asked him what for if he hadn't called him when he hadn't.

A man who has a bad cold isn't apt to be in the best of humors, and the major's face as he sneezed appeared without being called the major was not clear through.

"Corporal," he snapped, "I've got a holy terror of a cold, and if you persist in pausing in here every time I sneeze because you think I'm going to pronounce your fool name, I'll have you up before a summary court, if it's the last act I do before I retire myself to death."

LEAVES $500 TO CHINAMAN

Miss Edith Rebecca Lord Also Willed $150,000 to Girl Who Have Never Beggar.

New York.—Miss Edith Rebecca Lord, daughter of John Tyler Lord, who died at Chicago, Ill., on July 7, 1899, left an estate valued at $379,681. One-half of her estate was left to heirs of John T. Lord.

One of Miss Lord's bequests was $500 to Ping Kee, a Chinaman, of California." She was willed $150,000 by the Gordon Fund for Animals in London, for pensions to blind persons who have never begged alms.

AGED OFFICER SEEKS A DUEL

Legal Quarrel Over Legion of Honor Results in Challenge for Battle.

Paris.—A challenge to a duel was sent by one French septuagenarian warrior, General Rose, aged seventy-two, to another still older, General Georges Fievelin, aged seventy-four, grand chancellor of the Legion of Honor.

The quarrel had its origin in legal proceedings started by General Fievelin to prevent members of the Order of National Merit, founded by General Rose, from wearing a button among its insignia and thus infringing the privileges of members of the Legion of Honor.

The seconds of the two aged officers met to deliberate as to whether a combat be necessary.

ART MARVELS FROM THE SEA

Ancient and Valuable Relics Removed From Sunken Ship Off Tunisian Coast.

Paris—News has been received of an archaeological find of the greatest interest. At Mahdia, on the Tunisian coast, five or six years ago some Greek sponge fishers noticed a strange mass of wreckage lying at a depth of 130 feet to the north of Mahdia lighthouse. Amid a jumble of timbers lay splendid marble columns, bronze statuettes, a superb life-sized boy's figure and other treasures, which they succeeded in bringing to the surface.

It has now been discovered that the sunken ship was a vessel of about 400 tons, 100 feet long and 25 feet broad. She was laden with an extraordinary, heterogeneous cargo, not only blocks of marble, but bases and capitals for columns, edifice, statues, furniture, tiles, leaden pipes, lamps, amphores, etc. Among the fragments were found figures of a dancing girl and a minion and fawn which correspond almost exactly with those upon what is known as the Borghese vase dug up in Rome and now in the Louvre.

The bottom of the hold contains about sixty columns of bluish white marble thirteen feet high, which were probably one of the causes of the wreck of an evidently too heavily freighted ship. All the inscriptions discovered relate to Attica and personages of the middle of the fourth century B. C., and it might have been thought that the vessel had been that period bet for the Boethne statue and a lamp of a pattern only introduced into Attica at the end of the second century B. C. Some writing on lead ingots also is in the Latin of that epoch, and experts have coincided so far that the vessel was loaded at Attica for Rome and probably the cargo was the spoil after the taking of Athens by Sulla in 86 B. C.

LAWLER'S MOVE IS BIG SURPRISE:

firaches are to be established in every county in the state. Woman suffrage came near getting by at the last session of the legislature, and it would have figured better had governor Eberhart insisted on the special session of the legislature he threatened to call this fall.

Though the Minnesota Woman's Suffrage association is doing everything possible to arouse interest in its cause it can not be said that the rank and file of Minnesota female population is crazy over the idea. If it were not for a few zealous women who have been members of the legislature the votes for women idea would never be thought of. So many members of the legislature the thought of vote for women and their participation in politics is repugnant but rather than stand the constant bombardment of those who patrol the legislative halls daily they finally give in. It was this constant harrassment that came near putting the movement across last year.

If Senator Johnson of Chisago county is going to retire from the Republican congressional contest in the new Tenth district has letters received by friends fail to show such. On the contrary they say that Senator Johnson is very busy in the district and that he proposes to go through with it to the finish. He has already made several expansive accounts as required by law in primary and is reported to be preparing to go on the stump shortly. Mannhem's backers are said to be responsible for the retirement story. They fear Senator Johnson and his army of votes overlooked in discrediting him if possible.

Do not be surprised if you hear of the announced candidacy of James A. Larson for representative from the Second district. The story down here is that the genial republican boss of state is grooming himself for the race and his hat may be in the ring most any time now. Before going on the position of assistant secretary of state Mr. Larson was reported to be district in the legislature and made quite a record. He is also a forceful speaker and an orator of no mean ability.

Henry Rines of Mora, who is generally picked to go after State Auditor Iverson, has had some of the wind over the $50 necessary to entitle him to a place on the primary ballot, but the dispatches tell of a conference had by him with R. C. Dunn at Princeton last week. The report is current that Mr. Rines is at least preparing for the campaign. He passed by the Princeton man and Mr. Rines can not go far wrong in seeking his aid.

Attorney General Smith is much concerned regarding about 60,000 acres of swamp land now due the state from the federal government. The protest lodged by members of the Northwestern Minnesota delegation against its delivery until the state has reclaimed those school lands now in its possession is not to the whole thing a setback and may head off the offer to reclaim the land that is now to be entitled. As Mr. Smith points out the lands in the Red river valley region are not any too eager to turn over federal lands to the state, and a protest like the one made by members of the association will be promptly taken advantage of to cause further delay. THE COUNTY CHAIRMAN.

Virginia Was Fifth Kingdom.

Virginia is known as the Old Dominion because it was sometimes recognized as a separate kingdom. Beyond in 1580, dedicated his "Faerie Queene" to Elizabeth, England, Virginia, France, Ireland and Virginia. When James VI. of Scotland came to the English throne, England, Scotland and Virginia was called in compliment the fifth kingdom. And as Virginia owned from the start the whole continent, the name was given to the settlement of her father, Charles. In gratitude, caused the arms of Virginia to be quartered with those of England, Scotland and Ireland as an independent member of the kingdom.—Kansas City Star.

Reading Between the Lines.

To get the most of the library in the school of life you must bring into it something better than a mere booklet taste. You must bring the power to read between the lines, behind the words, beyond the horizon of the printed page. Phillip's question to the queen of Ethiopia was crucial, "Understandest thou what thou readest?" I want to meet you as you feel and to fill it with beautiful thoughts and images, to "dream" with you. Then we can new friends in the spirit, to purify my ideals, to help me to see and to show me the local color of unknown regions and the local interests of universal truth.—Henry van Dyke.

He Has Two Signatures.

There is one New York business man who is personally proof against the forger, as he has a signature which the forger must first get hold of one of his bank checks in order to imitate. Seeing the signature on a letter or bond register would do the forger no good. But it was the signature itself. "I don't particularly fear the forger," the business man admitted, "but my system makes it impossible for him to put the same. I am surprised that somebody doesn't hit on the scheme plan. It's very easy after you get the knack of staining your name two separate and distinct ways."—New York Globe.

Hard to Shift.

"Maria," sharply asked Mr. Durkins, "is that worthless young whipper snapper of a Dick Dogwood still coming to see Susie?"

"What do you mean by calling that way, John?" said Mrs. Durkins. "He hasn't been here in six weeks."

"Hasn't he? Is the scoundrel sticking with his affection?"—Chicago Tribune.

FREIGHT TRAIN DERAILED.

East Bound, Crookston to Duluth, Derailed at Tilden Junction.

Wednesday about noon an eastbound freight train on the Great Northern Crookston to Duluth line was knocked unconscious and pain fully injured. No one else received more serious injuries than slight bruises.

Mamma's Moving Picture.

"Suppose you are mamma's darling?"

"No, ma'am, I am my mamma's moving picture."

"Your mama's moving picture?"

"Ceanum, she's always telling me that I should be seen and not heard."—Houston Post.

How He Got His Promotion

By F. A. MITCHEL

"I must get a message through to General No," said General B. of the signal corps to his staff during the war between Russia and Japon. "Can no one of you suggest some device by which I may get it to the front?" Many counsels, and every one of them has been shot."

"Had we a balloon, general," said one, "we might succeed."

"A balloon would be riddled," replied the general.

"Has any one tried to go through in the night?" asked another.

"Yes, and failed. It is more difficult to pass at night than in the day time. In addition to reaching the risk of getting shot, a night would almost surely be lost in the darkness."

"I will carry your message, general," said Lieutenant Kamura, a five foot gymnaster weighing some ninety pounds.

"By what means?"

"Horse."

"Horse, most of our couriers have tried to get through in that way."

"They have not known how to be mounted through an enemy's camp by a horse. I am an equestrian."

"And how will you ride?"

"In a way to avoid the observation of the enemy."

"Well, you may go inside the horse if you can get my message through."

The horse not not decided just how I will ride. You know that the American Indians ride on one side of the horse, holding on by one hand and the one foot. If I could keep my enemy on my flank this plan might serve; but I am liable to be shot at from both sides. Give me your message, general, and when you see me start you will know all about it. I have great hopes of success."

"When will you start?"

"Between five tomorrow afternoon and 4 o'clock. It will be after the hour when the bullets are expected and when the men eaten the grenades are made."

The general gave orders that he should be called in time to see the start. In the morning when he went out before his tent he saw a horse standing there with no rider. But before the horse's head, on the ground, lay the coiled with bonds that were connected by the horse's bridle. He looked out between the horse's fore legs and saw Kamura's feet and head.

"Now I am ready, general," he said. "Will you please take your message in my belt?"

The general did his part and, wishing the gallant youngster all the luck in the world, watched him start.

On Kamura's heels were spurs with sharp rowels, and he was free to ride with the lower part of his legs. A short time after the horse had left the camp, the courier had the fastest horse that could be found in the Japanese army, and on his heels were the shortest spurs. He distanced the horse, and when some time later he rode up to the Japanese lines the horse's flanks were dripping blood.

The Japanese were as surprised as the Russians. They made a wild rush across and were congratulating themselves on their prize when a squeaky voice came from under the body. "Take me to General No's headquarters."

But before doing that they contrived Kamura and got him on the general instead of under him. then led him to their commander. Kamura took the message from his belt and said with the formality usual to soldiers on duty:

"General, I have the honor to hand you a message from General B."

"How did you get through from General B.'s camp?" asked General No.

"On foot."

"On horseback?" asked the general.

"No, general."

"By dogsled?" asked the general.

"Horse belly!" said the general.

"Horse belly?" what do you mean?"

"I was wrapped under the horse."

"What an idea! A splendid idea! You shall take a museum back un-sin-nder horse belly."

And that's exactly what Lieut. Kamura did. He rode back through the Russian lines in the same way he had come and delivered the reply to General B., who embraced him, and when he had discovered himself said:

"I shall send an account of your exploit to the war office at Tokyo and for your promotion to be captain at once."

And that's the way Lieutenant Kamura became a captain.

Which Won?

By EDNA ELLIS

Miss Van Winkle was a very pretty girl with mild blue eyes, through which she saw very distinctly till an occult ordered her to wear glasses. She was troubled with headaches, and the glasses were intended to correct astigmatism.

One day while walking on the street she met Bob Schofield, and in the moment of recognizing the light, striking on her glasses, got in the way of her eyesight, and she saw him dimly. The next time they were together he asked her what he had done to offend her. She was very much surprised and wished to know what he meant, whereupon he told her that she had passed him on the street without speaking to him.

"That must have been when I began to wear glasses," she said. "I've got quite used to them now, and you will have no further cause for complaint on that score."

Nevertheless the next time Miss Van Winkle met Mr. Schofield she cut him again. Whether it was due to her shyness or preoccupation or what it was he did not know, but he was quite sure it was unintentional.

A few evenings after this second cut he called at the lady's house and was received gradiously. He made no reference to her having ignored his presence a second time, but finally she asked her if she had got used to her glasses.

"Quite so," she replied. "I can see better than without them, and I now seldom have a headache."

"Do you think if you passed me on the street you would recognize me?"

"Of course I would."

"I doubt it."

"What do you mean? Do you know my eyes are better than I?"

"I don't believe you can see a church in the middle of the street."

"Well, I never! My eyesight is as good as yours."

"Tell me the next time I meet you in the street you won't know me."

"I'll not even look your way."

"Agreed."

Now, Mr. Schofield had no faith whatever in the old woman's tale. Brown, for whom he had often been mistaken. When Miss Van Winkle spoke of a twin brother Bob thought of the old woman's story, and straightway began to lay for the young lady in a very mean, contemptible and dishonest manner.

"I'll tell you what I'll do. You visit Brown three times tomorrow afternoon at 4 o'clock. I will be on the corner of Main and Broadway, and if you pass me without speaking to me I'll treat the crowd to a box of candy you can't pick me out from them.

"I take the bet."

"I mean I'll bet you a pound of candy! I don't want any candy myself; you must carry my stake with something else."

"Champ."

"Is a bet."

"Then it's understood."

"Very well; I withdraw the offer."

The next three afternoons after about 4 o'clock. Miss Van Winkle passed Brown three times, and straightway began to lay for the young lady in a very mean, contemptible and dishonest manner.

"I'll tell you what I'll do. You visit Brown three more tomorrow afternoon at 4 o'clock. I will be on the corner of Main and Broadway, and if you pass me without speaking to me I'll treat the crowd to a box of candy you can't pick me out from them.

"I take the bet."

"I mean I'll bet you a pound of candy! I don't want any candy myself; you must carry my stake with something else."

"Champ."

"Is a bet."

"Then it's understood."

"Very well; I withdraw the offer."

The same three very well that she would cease to his terms in time and the did. On the next day she brought the candy; we are all sensitive to any physical imperfection in ourselves and the bad could not see for the moment. She agreed to his terms, and a condition was added that when about ready to fast distort she should bow to the lady she passed and to go 5th, they working for enough short to prevent any doubt in the matter. The terms of the bet were established and brought, "Is a bet."

Schofield went straight to his cousin and told him of his bet and established a plan. Brown agreed to do his part. Brown agreed to do so, and the next morning they met at a tailoring establishment and bought twin suits. Then they went to a barber and had their hair and beards trimmed exactly alike. When they had finished their process of making themselves look—Bob, scars, suits, gloves and boots were exactly similar—Bob hoped that in the confusion of starting he should be feared the odds were against him.

At exactly 4 o'clock the two men took positions on the corner of Elton avenue. While Miss Van Winkle was sweeping from her home near the other. She was very careful of being shy, and as Bob took from his friend, though she took every precaution, even adjusting her glasses with a compound of alcohol and ammonia. But she expected to see them over dressed in her own way—and did not count on a similarity of appearance. Bob came near a few blocks, keeping her eyes fixed on Brown's clothes, and when she saw the two men coming. It did occur to her that either of them was in a hurry, and that the distance that she was to make the decision. But she was not to get it, for, most and only Bob, she passed them without speaking to either. Then each party turned.

"I don't care," pouted Miss Van Winkle; "that won't fair at all. You had no right to dress alike."

"Why, Miss Van Winkle," said Mr. Brown, "I'm sure you're all of fifteen avenue. While Miss Van Winkle was speaking from her home near the other. She was very careful of being shy, and as Bob took from his friend, though she took every precaution, even adjusting her glasses with a compound of alcohol and ammonia. ABUNDANT SUPPLY OF GOOD WATER

MUCH WATER USED IN CITY SYSTEM DOES NOT TAX WELL.

It is evident that Red Lake Falls has a well that will supply the needs of the city for all time. The well is now being given a test that is determining its "staying qualities." Several property owners have had city water piped to their premises and at two places in the city streams are flowing from the mains continually twenty-four hours of the day. This would drain a well with a limited supply of water, but has an noticeable effect upon the city well. E. F. Wheeler, who has charge of the pumping, says that since the water has been flowing in the public places there has been no noticeable effect upon the well. The only difference is that it is necessary to run the pumping machinery a little longer each day to fill up the tank. The pump is now run about an hour each day.

WEDDINGS THIS WEEK.

Beginning with Monday each day this week except today—and today is just beginning—has been marked by a wedding of local interest.

On Monday Miss Marie Perquish, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Perrault of Terrebonne and Mr. James Poirier were married. The wedding took place at St. Anthony's church in Terrebonne, Rev. Fr. LeFlock officiating. Mr. and Mrs. Trudeau will reside on a farm in Terrebonne township.

On Wednesday took place the wedding of Miss Marie LaCrosse, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John LaCrosse, and Mr. W. F. Markeun, son of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Markeun. The ceremony was performed at St. Joseph's church at nine o'clock in the morning. Rev. Fr. Boyce officiating. Last evening a reception was held at the LaCrosse home. The young people will reside in this city.

SHOT AT GIRL BUT MISSED THE MARK

HUNTERS IN TERRESONNE COUNTRY RECKLESS WITH BIG GUNS.

To be considered "a dear" may not be displeasing to any nice young lady, but to be taken for "a deer" during the season when reckless hunters are permitted to be abroad in the land is not so pleasing even if very thrilling.

This is the experience that recently came to a Terrebonne young lady, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Dupont. She was walking along the road when there was the explosion of a gun and a bullet whizzed by close to her head. She screamed and started to run and then a whole volley was shot by a bunch of hunters. For the moment her situation could not have been more thrilling had she been penned by a bunch of Montana cowpunchers. Her escape is probably due to the fact that excited hunters usually shoot wildly

ALL NIGHT UNDER TOMBSTONE

TRYING EXPERIENCE OF WELL KNOWN FARMER NEAR PLUMMER.

Plummer, Minn.—Lying all night in the bitter cold with a 500 pound tombstone across the lower limbs, unable to move, was the trying experience of Louis Ball, a farmer living seven miles east of here, Friday night.

Ball was driving home in the evening with the tombstone and when about four miles west of town the team ran away, throwing Ball and the tombstone, with Ball underneath and pinned firmly to the ground, unable to move the heavy stone from his body. There he remained all night, suffering from the weight of the stone and the intense cold. In the morning a passing farmer relieved him, almost exhausted from the exposure and pain. Fortunately no bones were broken, and except for being badly bruised, he will suffer no permanent injuries.

NOT LEGALLY ELECTED

Thief River and Crookston People Overlooked Provision of New Law.

Crookston municipal election, held Nov. 4th, was not a valid election, according to rulings from City Attorney Rowe and Attorney General Smith. Under the Corrupt Practices act which governs every election of any kind in the state, all the candidates must file a statement of their expenses before his name is allowed on the ballot. This is supposed to be done the Saturday before election, while the city clerk is also supposed to post a sample ballot, a week before election. This makes the law contradictory and makes it impossible for the city clerk to comply with the provisions, as it is impossible for any person to be sure on Tuesday which candidates will have complied with the law the following Saturday and entitled to a place on the official ballot.

According to section 20 of the corrupt practices act, blanks should have been furnished all candidates at the time of the filing of nomination papers, on which they were supposed to make their statement of expenses.

It would look as though it was a matter for the courts to straighten out, as there was no intention on the part of any of the candidates to evade the law, nevertheless all the candidates were illegally elected and should they be allowed to hold office the affairs of the city would be badly tangled up.

The following newly elected officials have called at the office of the city clerk to file their acceptances: Messrs. Morris, Moreley, Erickson, Ellingbausen, Ellington, Snyder and Holseth. In each case the city clerk has refused to accept the filing, telling that he would be held criminally liable should he do so.

Thief River Falls is in a similar muddle, the election there having been held at the same time as the one here, and under similar conditions.—Crookston Press.

IMPORTANT MEETING TUESDAY AFTERNOON

ANNUAL ELECTION OF RED LAKE COUNTY AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY.

Every stockholder of the Red Lake County Agricultural Society who can possibly attend the annual meeting of the society should arrange to be on hand. The meeting will be held at the Riverside Club rooms in this city at 2 o'clock next Tuesday afternoon, Dec. 2.

To make the work of the society and the annual county fair a success something more than the money paid in by purchasers of stock is needed. Enthusiastic support of the county fair and co-operative effort counts more than anything else. Stock holders can best show their interest by attending the annual meeting and lending their enthusiasm to the enterprise.

ADVANTAGES OF THE PARCELS POST

FARMERS ON ROUTES MAY MAKE SERVICE WORK FOR THEM.

With the new local rates recently established by the postmaster general, which become effective June 15th, it is possible to send a parcel weighing twenty pounds from any office to points on its routes, or from points on the routes to other points thereon or to the distributing office, for the sum of 15 cents or three-quarters of a cent a pound. The added expense to the cost of any goods so transported is here so slight that surely many will desire to avail themselves of this service. For who among the farmer patrons of any post office can afford to hitch up a team and drive 8 or 10 miles to town, especially in the busy season of the year, or during the cold winter, for a few necessaries from the grocer or hardware dealer or the meat market, or to deliver a few dozen eggs, a few pounds of butter or a few dressed fowl, when the service can be performed for them for a mere trifle?

To illustrate what can be done with the parcel post system, we will quote a few illustrations of what can be included in twenty pounds:

	Lbs.
Sugar	8½ $ 0.50
Tea	1 .50
Coffee	1 .30
Yeast	¼ .05
Salmon	1 .10
Salt	5 .10
Soda	1 .10
4 dozen soap	3 .20
	19 2-4 $1.85

	Lbs.
Sausage	2	$ .40
Sugar	4¼	.25
Coffee	1	.35
Soda	1	.10
Corn starch	1	.05
2 bars soap	2½	.25
1 can salmon	1	.15
2 can sardines	1	.24
Raisins	1	.10
1 sack salt	3	.05
Yeast	¼	.05
	17 3-4	$1.79

Almost any article can be selected for any of these named, when so packed or wrapped as to prevent damage to other mail matter, and will be accepted for local delivery either at the office of mailing or on any mail route starting therefrom.

The country housewife can order supplies by telephone or mail and no doubt any dealer would be willing to send out to some other dealer and obtain anything desired which he did not carry in stock himself and include it in the parcel.

On the return trip, send by the carrier for the merchant or the local consumer a five pound jar of butter, which can be delivered for nine cents, two three pound chickens for 8 cents, six dozen eggs for 9cents, in single packages, or if a combination is made to one address, a three pound jar of butter, two three pound chickens and four dozen eggs could be sent together for 15 cents. A case containing 10 dozen eggs would cost 14 cents to deliver. All produce mailed by parcel post will receive careful handling and prompt delivery by carriers. All fourth class (domestic parcel post) mail must bear the name and address of the sender.

The development of the local parcel post system will tend to bring the country and town in a close relationship in the mutual accommodation of farmer and merchant and local consumer.

W. E. LEE SAID TO HAVE AMBITIONS

LONG PRAIRIE BANKER MAY GET INTO GOVERNORSHIP RACE.

St. Paul—(Special)—Republican political circles were disturbed by the information that W. E. Lee of Long Prairie has taken the bit in his teeth and is preparing to throw his hat in the ring. It is said that the next ten days will see the official registration of his name. To be frank about the whole thing it will have to be said that the news regarding Mr. Lee came from Eberhart sources, which is a very minimizes the report of his entrance into the gubernatorial race, but, as they say, where there is smoke there must be some fire, and it is a ten to one shot that if "Bill" has not really made up his mind to take the leap he is at least considering it. Dave Iven State Auditor Iverson, who would be the one to suffer by the entrance of a candidate of the standing of Mr. Lee, is generally believed to have an understanding with the Long Prairie man. Knowing ones hold to the opinion that recent guarded interviews by Mr. Lee covering his possible candidacy reveal this feature. Still, as I said, there is no chance of "Bill" going into the game. Up state friends interested in the gubernatorial game brought down what they claim to be positive information that Fred Snyder of Minneapolis was preparing an appeal to the voters; also L. C. Spooner of Morris, but if either have gubernatorial aspirations they have failed to indicate it to me in any somewhat way. For a week now Mr. Spooner has been hovering about the Twin Cities, attending to private matters, and, while any talk indulged in by him is a political way he had to do with everything but the governorship. So far the loss candidates are Mr. Iverson and Governor Eberhart, and between you and me, fellows, I think these two will have the boards to themselves for a while at least.

The scheme of the state board of control to use convicts at the Stillwater prison on state road work and in the reclamation of state lands received a decided setback from Attorney General Smith when he ruled that the law as it now stands will not permit such. At the same time Mr. Smith announced that it would seek aid from the next legislature in having the law changed. The idea of the board was to use about fifty convicts in the improvement of the grounds and farm attached to the state sanitarium for consumptives at Walker. Inasmuch as the board will have about 250 lids to clamp with the expiration of the present prison contract next year it also desired to use this excess labor in the road building. The present law in relation to the employment of prison labor prohibits their use in any industry or line of work that will bring them in competition with free labor and this was the basis of the negative answer as made by the attorney general.

Friends all over the state will be pained to learn of the nervous breakdown suffered by Henry Feig of Alexandria, who has been one of the state railroad and warehouse commission. Mr. Feig, who is supervisor of local grain elevators, was stricken in St. Paul and his condition became so bad that he had to be put under restraint. He has since been removed to a sanitarium, where his condition is said to be serious. Mr. Feig has been a prominent figure in state political circles for over a quarter of a century. He served during three sessions of the legislature as a house member from Randyolph county. In 1892 he was the Republican candidate for congress from the Seventh district, but lost to Halvor Steen, the Populist candidate, by eighty-five votes.

It is mere gossip, but rumor has it that H. J. Rider of the state game and fish commission and executive agent of that body, may sever his connection with the commission the first of the year. His term expires then and the talk is that he may not be reappointed. Mr. Rider, who was appointed by Little Falls to succeed the Democratic holdover, hit the job at a strenuous period. During the last session the commission was handled without gloves by a house investigating committee and its appropriation was reduced. Mr. Rider is not the fuzz fed that some of his predecessors were and in consequence he has been made the goat on a number of occasions. He is inclined also to be rather blunt and accept blame on occasions even when

INDIANS RALLY TO DEFEND RENEGADES

15,000 NAVAJO WARRIORS ARE ASSEMBLED TO DEFY MARSHAL'S FORCES.

OFFICERS ARE AFTER EIGHT

Wanted in Answer for Various Crimes —Request for Two Troops of Cavalry Referred to War Department.

Santa Fe, N. M., Nov. 19.—Fifteen hundred Navajo Indians have rallied in defence of eight renegades and are reported in armed encampment on Bountiful mountain, 75 miles southwest of the Shiprock agency, deputies of the United States Marshal Nutt to take prisoner the renegades who are wanted on federal warrants charging horse stealing, assault and bigamy.

Cavalry Are Asked For.

Two troops of cavalry have been asked for by the marshal and the request has been referred by the war department to Major General Carter in command of the border patrol.

The Indians are fortifying on a high table mountain, the summit of which is approachable by only one tortuous road.

Marshal Hudspeth returned with three of the 11 renegades. The eight others escaped and called their tribesmen to the defense before the marshal reached the agency.

Conference of Agents.

The request for troops was made after a conference at the reservation between Indian agents, after the Navajos had sent word that the renegades would not be given up and that they would not only resist arrest, but that if attacked they would realist, hurt the agency and kill those in charge.

An investigation showed that the Indians surrounding the renegade leaders had rounded up their cattle and sheep, harvested their corn, and otherwise made ready for a siege.

The indians are led by Chief Black Horse and 150 young bucks.

METHOD IN BOILING WATER

Chicago Domestic Science Department to Begin With Fundamentals.

Chicago, Nov. 18.—Prospective brides who are ignorant as to the proper method to boil water and content brides whose husbands think further information on that subject would do no harm, will have an opportunity to get it free next month.

It was announced here at the School of Domestic Arts and Sciences that for the following week a free course will be colarged. Classes were opened last year, but tuition was charged. This year there will be instruction in the fundamentals free of charge.

"Of course, some have fairly definite ideas on the question of boiling water," explained Mrs. Lucy Gillett Allen, "but don't know the methods of boiling different vegetables. They don't know one vegetable should be dropped into the boiling water and others into cool water which must be brought to the boiling point.

"They don't know that soft water has its uses, which are different from those to which hard water should be put."

TEXAS WILL PROTECT SELF

Governor Asserts He Will Not Hesitate to Call Out the State Militia.

Austin, Texas, Nov. 19.—"In the event Mexican start trouble, we will protect our citizens and not wait for Washington to act," asserted Governor O. B. Colquitt, after a conference with Adjutant General Hutchings. While no official statement was given out it is known that the Texas National guard is to be ready to answer any call. The conference was the outcome of a threat by Mexicans to make Texas "answer to the whole Mexican people" unless mercy was shown Mexican ammunition smugglers charged with murder.

Governor Colquitt did not appeal to Washington of events. He said that during a recent outbreak along the Mexican border federal troops did not act until the Texas rangers had been called out.

Wife of Harvard Coach Hosts.

New York, Nov. 19.—Mrs. Percy D. Haughton, wife of the football coach of Harvard university, receives $380,000 from the estate of her first husband, the late Rev. Dr. Richard L. Howell, according to a probate court report filed here. Dr. Howell, who was known as one of the wealthiest clergymen in America, died February 1, 1910.

King Will Likely Abdicate.

Berlin, Nov. 18.—King Ferdinand of Bulgaria, who arrived in Cohurg, is passing through such a crisis according to well informed circles in Cohurg and Berlin that his abdication of the throne in favor of his son is a possibility and even probable. The king is residing incognito at the palace in Cohurg. Austrian states are doing their utmost to discourage his proposed surrender of the throne because they consider the young Crown Prince Boris likely to be influenced by the element friendly to Russia.

Yale Student Fails to Death.

New Haven, Conn., Nov. 18.—John R. A. Lamson of Louisville, Ky., a Yale sophomore, fell from a second story window in Durfee hall at Yale while walking in his sleep, and was instantly killed. Edwin Stein, Lamson's roommate, was unaware of the accident until the body was found. Lamson was 19 years old.

Kapsas City, Mo., Nov. 18.—Nathan Smason, a pawnbroker, was murdered in his place of business in Kansas City, Kansas, and his shop looted.

BANDIT IN CHARGE OF CAR

LONE ROBBER TAKES WHAT MAIL HE CHOOSES.

Binds Three Clerks and Helps Himself to All Registered Packages of Any Value.

San Francisco, Nov. 19.—For more than an hour a masked Chinaman was in charge of the mail car on e Southern Pacific Short Line limited train from Los Angeles, between San Jose and this city, while the three mail clerks lay on the floor, bound with ropes and their heads covered with sacks.

The bandit carefully helped himself to the registered mail, sold through all the letters and packages and discarding money orders and other articles which he did not want.

As the train reduced its speed upon entering the yards, the robber jumped and, leaping from the car and escaped.

The performance was duplicated only about a month ago, when the bandit compelled the clerks to poke their heads into mail sacks.

The amount of the robber's loot has not been learned as yet.

LAKE STORM KILLED 256

Property Loss is Estimated at $5,000,000, and Many Steamers Were Lost.

Port Huron, Mich., Nov. 17.—Only one additional boat disaster has developed as a result of the terrific lake storms and that is the wrecking of the steamer Major off Whitefish point in Lake Superior. She was abandoned by her crew. The crew was picked up by the steamer Superior.

The life loss among sailors is estimated at 256 and the total of the property loss is figured at more than $5,000,000. The property loss includes the score or more of vessels driven on the rocks or shore and partially or entirely destroyed. One hundred and ninety-five lives were taken on the Great Lakes during the tempestuous fortnight. Of these, 46 lives were lost in Lake Superior, seven on Lake Michigan and six on Lake Erie.

RAIL STRIKE IS ARBITRATED

Both Sides Accept Proposal for Mediation—Southern Train Services Resumed.

Houston, Texs., Nov. 19.—Twelve hours after the settlement of the strike of the operating employes practically normal passenger service had been restored in the Southern Pacific lines of the Southern Pacific railroad and for the first time since the strike started, freight trains were moved.

The strike was ended when both sides accepted a proposal of the federal board of mediation and conciliation that the railway meet a joint committee from the engineers, firemen, conductors and trainmen for the discussion of the sixty-seven alleged grievances which the men have presented.

REPLY OF WEATHER BUREAU

Denies Blame for Losses of Life in the Great Lakes Disaster.

Washington, Nov. 19.—In reply to charges that the bad weather bureau had not given adequate warning to vessels plying on the Great Lakes of the approach of last week's terrific storm which resulted in a loss of 254 lives, and to the announcement by Representative Gordon of Ohio that he would seek an investigation of the matter, the bureau has issued a statement declaring that "the storm warnings of the bureau were handled in as complete a manner as possible."

Full responsibility for the forecasts was taken by the bureau, the local forecaster at Cleveland being absolved from any blame.

In each case amendments to the administrative currency bill agreed upon, were designed to cover the "transition period," while banks are transformed into their reserves to the proposed new federal banks.

Breaks Precedent at Harvard.

Cambridge, Mass., Nov. 19.—A precedent was broken at Harvard university when Miss Helen Todd of San Francisco, chairman of the League of Western Women Voters, spoke on woman suffrage before students of the university. It was the first time that a "Votes for Women" propagandist had been allowed to speak in a college hall. The meeting was held in Sever Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst two years ago.

Rebels Take Another Town.

Galveston, Texas, Nov. 19.—A wireless message reports Tampico taken by the Mexican rebels, but confirmation of the report can not be had.

Police Woman are Well Armed.

Chicago, Nov. 19.—Revolvers take the place of powder puffs in the handbags carried by Chicago police women. It had been generally supposed that the police women were unarmed, until Officer Clara Olson was discovered carefully oiling her pistol. "I guess we might as well tell the truth," she said. "The revolvers form the powder puff that might be supposed to be in the bags which we carry in our left hands. It is a handy place."

Passengers Saved From Steamer.

New York, Nov. 19.—With 108 passengers rescued from the burning steamer Salmas at sea, 600 miles east of Bermuda last week, the steamer Pannonia arrived. The Pannonia anchored at quarantine and immigration officials will decide whether the passengers from the Salmas will be kept on board until the Pannonia returns to the Mediterranean or sent to the immigration station at Ellis Island to await the departure of the next steamer for Spain.

NO DEFINITE MOVE IN MEXICAN AFFAIR

HUERTA'S ACTION HASN'T CAUSED WASHINGTON TO ACT, AS YET.

MANY LEAVE MEXICO CITY

Foreigners Seem to Fear Capital Will Be Cut Off—Dictator's Arrest is Rumored.

Nogales, Sonora, Tex., Nov. 19.—Another conference and another failure to agree on points at issue resulted in negotiations between President Wilson's envoy, William Bayard Hale, and Francisco Escudero, Constitutionalist minister of foreign relations, who represents Venustiano Carranza.

Final Outcome Uncertain.

The final outcome, which must be decided within a day or two, was rendered still more uncertain by the announcement that General Carranza was preparing a manifesto setting forth his position with regard to the internal and internationl relations of Mexico.

The indications were that the Washington government was demanding of the revolutionists certain guarantees, which the latter apparently believed fatally concerned their dignity and independence of action.

Every Defender Killed.

Brownsville, Tex., Nov. 19.—Every member of the defending federal garrison was killed before the Constitutionalists captured Victoria, capital of the northern state of Tamaulipas.

This report was made to the constitutionalist headquarters at Matamoros by General Pablo Gonzales, commanding the column which captured Victoria, with headquarters at Matamoros. General Gonzales report Matamoroans enroute from Monterey.

Nock Broken; Fools Surgeons.

New Rochelle, N. Y., Nov. 19.—While in a fair way to make good his promise to "fool the surgeons," made more than two years ago when his neck was broken as the result of diving into shallow water, Waldorf Mill, 42, 19 years old, is dead from stomach trouble. He had so far recovered from his injury that three weeks ago he was permitted to leave his wheel chair and walk a few steps. Several years ago a brother of Miller also broke his neck by diving and lived ten days after the accident.

Wilmington, Del., Nov. 18.—Governor Charles Miller has issued a statement in defense of the Delaware whipping post and declared that that method of punishment for criminals in Delaware would continue until the Delaware public in its wisdom, regardless of any attempted interference by a member of congress or of individuals residing in other states. They are ignorant of conditions and permit themselves to be misled by extravagant and highly colored newspaper articles.

CONSIDER PANIC PREVENTION

Both Branches of Currency Committee Discuss Means for Relieving Possible Stringency.

Washington, Nov. 19.—Means of protecting the country against possible financial stringency when the proposed new currency system goes into effect were considered by both the senate and house currency committees in the senate banking and currency committee.

In each case amendments to the administrative currency bill agreed upon, were designed to cover the "transition period," while banks are transformed into their reserves to the proposed new federal banks.

London, Nov. 19.—Lord O'Brien, lord chief justice of Ireland since 1895, has resigned, owing to ill health.

SPENCER WILL BE HANGED

SLAYER OF DANCING TEACHER IS FOUND GUILTY.

Confessed to Wholesale Murders, but Little of Story Was Credited— Curses and Reviles Court.

Chicago, Nov. 17.—Henry Spencer confessed slayer of Mrs. Mildred Allyn Rexroat, a dancing teacher, was found guilty of murder by a jury at Wheaton, e mhurb.

The death penalty was fixed by the jury, which returned a verdict after little more than two hours' deliberation. The first ballot was 11 to 1 for death penalty and the second ballot was unanimously in favor of sending Spencer to the gallows. Spencer was arrested on Oct. 5, charged with having lured Mrs. Rexroat to Wayne, Ill., and placing her body on the railroad track after he had shot her to death Mrs. Rexroat's body was found early in the evening of Sept. 27.

Immediately after his arrest Spencer began a wholesale confession in which he asserted he had murdered 22 persons, most of them women, and nearly all for the purposes of robbery. Although the police proved that Spencer could not have committed more than of these murders, they still maintain that he killed at least one and perhaps two women in eddition to the dance hall teacher.

Since his arrest Spencer has insisted that he is sane in the death penalty. When his trial began Monday, however, his attitude in the court room was one of such violence that Prosecutor Hadley saw in it e well defined attempt to establish the belief that the defendant was insane. The jury, however, refused to be moved by these tactics.

Spencer was the only witness to take the stand in his defense. He testified and for fifteen minutes held the court room in a shocked silence while he cursed and reviled his own counsel and the state's attorney.

REVISION OF BANKING LAWS

Question Comes to Front as Consequence of Proposed Currency Measure.

Washington, Nov. 18.—With the administration currency bill due to be reported to the senate this week after the first of December, the revision of national banking laws to meet the new currency system has come to the appearance in legislative circles. It will provide quarterly instead of currently stated on a part of the circulation privilege, the problem of providing cheaper money for the farmer who now mortgages his land at high rates of interest to obtain funds.

Two Views to Be Filed.

Washington, Nov. 18.—Hope for a unanimous report from the committee on the new currency bill was about dispelled at a meeting of the Republican members after Hitchcock said that probably no formal committee report would be submitted to the senate. The day before, however, Hitchcock declared he would do the same.

In connection with this proposed report, congress will take up the far-reaching questions of rural credits, the problem of providing cheaper money for the farmer who now mortgages his land at high rates of interest to obtain funds.

Royal Estrangement Permanent.

Stockholm, Nov. 18.—An official announcement is made that Princess Marie, wife of Prince William, the Swedish prince, has determination never to return to her husband and that all efforts to induce her to reconsider her decision have failed. Prince William and the princess were married on October 6 at Pavlovsna, daughter of the grand duke, Paul Alexandrovitch, who died in 1908. The princess left her home recently on account of domestic troubles.

Woman Have to Skip and Jump.

New York, Nov. 17.—A lady in a bobbie skirt may hop, but you haven't any right to expect her to skip or jump. That's the decree of Police Captain George Cooley of Yonkers, N. Y., in consequence of which he gave orders to his policemen stationed along South Broadway, where the autocars whirl, to tighten their grip hard on the speed limit. Captain Cooley says he has been deluged by complaints from women that they do not have time to cross the street.

Woman Have to Skip and Jump.

Madison, Wis., Nov. 20.—Amusement and exercise for penitentiary inmates is the theory of G. Hallpin, poultry man for the college of agriculture of the University of Wisconsin as a means of preventing the annual winter shortage of eggs. "Right now poultry houses should be deeply bedded with dry straw," said Mr. Halpin, "and the grain feed should be worked into the litter so the hens may get good exercise and amusement hunting for it."

CONGRESS WILL NOT BE GIVEN VACATION

SENATOR SITUATION SUCH THAT THEY WILL BE KEPT IN SESSION.

MONEY BILL SPLITS PARTY

Effort to Pass Measure at Once Abandoned by Wilson's Friends —Hitchcock Fights Bill.

Washington, Nov. 14.—The attempt to force the pending banking and currency bill through the senate has been abandoned by the Democratic caucus and the measure is now sent back to the banking and currency committee of the senate for further consideration. It became apparent that the main body of Democrats could not agreed on the details of the measure.

Practical Agreement Assured.

A practical agreement by six Democratic senators, half of the committee, and hope for a final report within five or six days, is reported to the democratic caucus by Senator Owen and at his request the conference took no action.

Since the call for the conference was issued Senators Reed and O'Gorman had joined Chairman Owen and Senators Pomerene, Shafroth and Hollis in the support of the administration measure, despite their vote against some of its provisions in the committee. Senators Democrats who have virtually agreed on a bill which limits the issues of the federal reserve. This measure will be taken before the senate as soon as possible.

Hitchcock Is Obstinate.

A further attempt to swing Senator Hitchcock into line with the Democratic Democratic colleagues was made last night at a conference of the committee after the conference, but Senator Hitchcock insisted that he could not reconcile his views with the demands of the president. The full committee, Democratic and Republican, are now making another attempt to reach an agreement among a majority.

It this fails it is probable that the Democrats and Republicans will make a unanimous report on these details of the bill. Which they approve and submit supplementary reports showing the senate their disagreement on the fundamentals of the bill. The Republicans and Senator Hitchcock have announced their determination to stand out to the last for the public ownership of the regional banks in the new system and for government control of these banks.

Think Passage Is Not Near.

Chairman Owen was asked by several members whether or not he was convinced that currency legislation could not be disposed of before recess at this session of congress and whether an adjournment of congress might not be taken. He made no definite reply, but several senators took the position that the best for the country legislation before Dec. 1 was concerned, congress might just as well adjourned.

There has been considerable pressure on the administration, if only for a few days or two weeks, on both sides of the capitol, but it is understood that in view of the Mexican situation, congress will be kept in Washington regardless of comfort or inclination.

Road Enthusiast Speaks.

Manchester, N. H., Nov. 14.—The labor and money spent on the famous old canal might have been used to hatter purpose on the highways of the country, Logan Waller Page, director of the National Grange, told delegates to the annual convention of the New Patrons of Husbandry in his annual report. The failure of the Panama canal is a national project of which all Americans are proud, yet the same amount of labor and money spent on our highways at home would create wealth beyond belief and probably more important, he said.

Would Censor Hat Trimmings.

New York, Nov. 14.—Nervous, half-headed old gentlemen who have been tickled into nervous effects in fashion's whirl by women wearing this season have organized the "Spats," otherwise the Society for the Prevention of Useless Trimmings, and by law the length of feathers to twelve inches. The society will be national in scope and all victims of the long plume evil will be eagerly accepted as members.

Madison, Wis., Nov. 20.—Amusement and exercise for penitentiary inmates is the theory of G. Hallpin, poultry man for the college of agriculture of the University of Wisconsin as a means of preventing the annual winter shortage of eggs. "Right now poultry houses should be deeply bedded with dry straw," said Mr. Halpin, "and the grain feed should be worked into the litter so the hens may get good exercise and amusement hunting for it."

SUFFRAGISTS VISIT CAPITOL

JERSEY WOMEN MEET ENEMY, HOWEVER.

Senator Martine When Urged to Support Movement Tells Delegation He Opposes Program.

Washington, Nov. 19.—Suffrages workers from New Jersey who came to Washington to enlist congressional support for the proposed constitutional amendment giving women the right to vote, met with opposition when they visited the capitol and importuned Senator Martine to champion their cause in the senate.

The New Jersey senator declared that he did not favor the proposed enfranchisement of women and that he probably would vote against the proposed amendment if it should come to an early issue in congress.

The suffrage delegation, numbering several score of women from various parts of New Jersey, had visited the White House earlier in the day and had urged President Wilson to add to the "Votes for Women" fight.

After their reception by Senator Martine at the senate they went to the house end of the capitol and presented petitions and arguments to New Jersey members of the house.

RAIL STRIKE IS ARBITRATED

Both Sides Accept Proposal for Mediation—Southern Train Services Resumed.

Houston, Tex., Nov. 19.—Twelve hours after the settlement of the strike of the operating employes practically normal passenger service had been restored in the Southern Pacific lines of the Southern Pacific railroad and for the first time since the strike started, freight trains were moved.

The strike was ended when both sides accepted a proposal of the federal board of mediation and conciliation that the railway meet a joint committee from the engineers, firemen, conductors and trainmen for the discussion of the sixty-seven alleged grievances which the men have presented.

Stefanson Party Likely Lost.

Seattle, Wash., Nov. 19.—Vilhjalmur Stefansson, arctic explorer and discoverer of the Blonde Eskimos, who was aboard the steamship Karluk when that vessel was last sighted off Herman island on Aug. 12, is believed to be lost, as is the vessel and others on which he sailed. Nothing has been seen or heard of the vessel since that date, despite the fact that extensive search has been made for it. Whalers say there is little hope of its ever being discovered, as the ice floes appear to have encountered the heavy weather.

Wild Suffragette Disturbance.

Sheffield, Eng., Nov. 19.—A wild suffragette disturbance occurred here when Philip Snowden, socialist member of parliament for Blackburn, attempted to address a "no-conscription" meeting arranged by the Labor party, but was howled down by the suffragettes. Snowden promptly took a hand and in the scrimmage were attacked by the sympathizers with the women. Some of the stewards were kicked and battered.

Cargo of Irish Corn.

Montreal, Nov. 19.—A cargo of corn grown in Ireland was brought into port by the steamer Bengore Head from Belfast. The importation of corn has been made necessary by the scarcity of the American crop, due to the drought in the Middle West. It has been found cheaper to import corn from Ireland than to bring it to Montreal from Chicago.

Passengers Saved From Steamer.

New York, Nov. 20.—With 108 passengers rescued from the burning steamer Salmas at sea, 600 miles east of Bermuda last week, the steamer Pannonia arrived. The Pannonia anchored at quarantine and immigration officials will decide whether the passengers from the Salmas will be kept on board until the Pannonia returns to the Mediterranean or sent to the immigration station at Ellis Island to await the departure of the next steamer for Spain.

GIRL BATTLES WITH INTRUDER

ENTERS FARMER'S HOME IN MIDNIGHT ATTACK.

Daughter of Douglas County Citizen Twice Wounded and Beaten With Gas Pipe.

Alexandria.—An assault, evidently with murderous intent, was made upon Miss Tina Petarson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Petarson, residing two miles north of Brandon. Miss Petarson escaped with two wounds, each from a revolver shot, one a scalp wound and the other a flesh wound in her side. Neither is considered serious.

Awakened by Noise.

Miss Petarson, who is 22 years of age, was awakened by a noise in the lower part of the house. She arose to investigate, and was part way down the stairs when she met a young man. She ran back, but was followed by her assailant, who carried a piece of gas pipe and a revolver. A scuffle ensued, the girl receiving a blow from the gas pipe and two shots.

The father was awakened and attacked the midnight visitor, striking him with a piece of furniture, but the man made his escape.

A young man in the neighborhood is under suspicion, but no arrest has as yet been made.

ST. PETER SOLDIER HONORED

Al. J. Potts, President of the Commercial Club, Receives Decoration from War Department.

St. Peter.—Nearly a quarter of a century after his participation in the last great Indian campaign of history Al. J. Potts, president of the St. Peter Commercial club, is to receive a decoration from the federal government. Heretofore he has been prevented from attaining the campaign badge by a regulation of the war department that medals could not be issued to soldiers discharged from the service prior to April 1, 1895. Recently, however, the department announced that badges would be issued in regular and volunteer soldiers entitled to them, thus opening the way to make application.

Mr. Potts will receive his decoration for taking part in the Wounded Knee campaign against the Sioux Indians in life winter of 1890-91. At that time he was a non-commissioned officer, a sergeant in Company C, Third United States infantry, and was stationed at Fort Meade.

TRAINS COLLIDE; CARS BURN

Two Enginemen Injured in Freight Wreck and Fourteen Box Cars Destroyed.

Bertha, Minn., Nov. 18.—Two men were badly injured and a freight train of fourteen cars was burned here when the second section of a Northern Pacific freight train crashed into the rear of the first.

The first section of fourteen cars, running to Minneapolis, stopped here to cool a hot box. Flags were set against the second section, but Charles E. Hilton, craftsman, did not see them. His engine, traveling at high speed, crashed through the caboose of the train, and through eight freight cars, overturning and setting the cars afire.

Hilton was rushed to a hospital, his legs badly crushed. J. J. Corbin, fireman, was also badly hurt.

The loss is estimated at $20,000.

LAWLER OUT FOR GOVERNOR

Files as Candidate in 1914 for Democratic Gubernatorial Race.

St. Paul.—Daniel William Lawler, former mayor of St. Paul, who was a candidate for United States senator in 1912 and for governor of Minnesota in 1892, has filed with the secretary of state as a candidate for the democratic nomination for governor in 1914.

Mr. Lawler sets forth in his declaration that he is a citizen and free-holder; a democrat and a fighting one, 55 years old, and with a statement of principles so exhaustive that it will take until January 1 to prepare, at which time it will be given to the public and nation. Mr. Lawler says the last senatorial campaign, has been practically law in St. Paul.

Monticello.—Fred Krause, 65 years old, a farmer living about four miles southeast of Montrose, while in a fit of temporary insanity, brought about it is said, by family trouble, placed the muzzle of a loaded shot gun in his mouth and discharged it.

Dealers to Reach Fargo Proves Undoing Moorhead.—Very fully making good his threat to steer somewhat to secure funds with which to come back to Fargo, Harry Olson of Moorhead, robbed the H. F. Bickman clothing store at Detroit. He pleaded guilty before judge of Moorhead and was sent to St. Cloud. Olson served thirty days in jail in Detroit on minor charges and after his release stole bicycles for sufficient money to go to Fargo. When this was refused he threatened to break into a store and raise money, and he did.

Claims Southern State Title.

Grand Meadow.—By defeating Spring Valley twelve to seven, Grand Meadow lays claim to the championship of southern Minnesota, having beaten Austin, Albert Lea and Leroy in the south central district.

Son Kills International Falls Man.

International Falls.—Mrs. Herman Blase of this city was shot through the heart and instantly killed when a rifle handled by her little son, Milton, 4 year old, was discharged.

CROOKSTON BALLOT INVALID

New Corrupt Practices Act Forgotten at Election Dathrowing Socialism.

Crookston.—After a red hot election, in which the socialists were opposed by the united forces of all other factions, and the socialist mayor, H. L. Larson, was defeated by Thomas Norrie, both City Attorney Rowe and the attorney general of Minnesota have declared the election was invalid because it was not held in accordance with the corrupt practices act passed by the 1912 session of the legislature.

This was the first election held in Crookston since the new act went into effect, and so thought was given it, all the candidates neglected to file statements of expenses incurred prior to the election. Some of them have filed statements since, but while this will relieve them of prosecution for violation of the law, it will not validate their election, according to the attorneys consulted.

The city clerk also failed to post a sample ballot in his office one week prior to the election. Under the law the penalty on the candidates who did not file their expense accounts is to withhold their names from the regular printed ballot, which was overlooked by the city clerk.

The city council has canvassed the election returns and by resolution announced the successful candidates elected. Some say, however, that the attorney general, however, City Clerk Childs has refused to send formal notification to the men declared elected, and has also refused to file the acceptance tendered by the successful candidates, who in turn wrote an indorsement on their acceptance, signed by witnesses, noting the refusal of the city clerk to accept the documents.

Thus the present status of affairs is chaotic. The city clerk was defeated and he cannot see any way out of the tangle. The democratic members have not yet formulated any line of action, but if it appears they will go into court by an action to mandamus the city clerk to issue notice of their election. In two wards the council lines were re-elected and they will hold over a year until their successors are elected.

BIG SURGEONS IN ROCHESTER

Attend Clinics and Are Guests of Mayos—Lecture at Rochester.

Rochester.—The three English surgeons, guests of Drs. W. J. and C. H. Mayo, attended a clinic in Rochester, and will remain in the city for several days, during which time they will deliver lectures before the Surgical club, which is composed of the visiting and local surgeons.

Sir Rickman Godlee, president of the Royal College of Surgeons, gave an address on the advance of surgery. On Tuesday Sir Arbuthnot Lane gave a lecture before the club. Sir Lane is private surgeon to the King George and also surgeon to Guys hospital of London. Sir Lane is acknowledged authority on bone surgery and several operations bear his name.

Sir Peterson, also a surgeon to the London hospital, will lecture also.

A reception was tendered the distinguished visitors at Maywood, which was attended by the visiting and local surgeons and physicians.

CONSPIRACY CASE DEFENSE

Hopes to Confine Federal Prosecution to Gus Small Band of Chippewas.

Fergus Falls.—The defense in the conspiracy case against H. L. Kalk, J. E. Perreult, and William Dran raised an interesting point by giving notice that it proposed to confine the prosecution to the testimony of Indians of the Mississippi band in attempting to prove the charges under which the defendants are indicted.

The indictment charges the defendants with a conspiracy which resulted in the defrauding of large numbers of Chippewa Indians of the Mississippi, the names of the Indians being duly set forth.

Man Mistaken for Deer.

Duluth.—If John Meadola, a farmer living near Chisholm, had not been wearing a gray cap his family doctors bills would not now be mounting as rapidly as they are. Meadola, hunting after Frank Green, of the Hartley location, fired a load of buckshot into his head, mistaking him for a deer. Green had wounded a deer and was trailing the animal through the underbrush when he suddenly heard a crackling of the undergrowth and, seeing Meadola's gray cap, fired. With the exception of Raymond Maturi, another farmer, Green, who was also shot was to a hospital, where he died within an hour.

Another Overturned Vessel.

Duluth.—Another large lake boat floating with its bottom up was sighted on Lake Huron by Captain W. Ruuvel of the steamer W. D. Carter, which has arrived in the Duluth harbor. There is the possibility of the vessel being the supposed wreck of the Regina, according to Captain Ruuvel, as the vessel is a pot bottom, while the bottom of the other derelict is painted black. The Greenwich crew reported that they sighted several other boats in distress.

Minor's Neck is Broken.

Duluth.—While repairing a rod on a steam shovel at the Dean mine, near Biwabik, Marco Scarcevich, age 20, was struck by a block of ore and almost instantly killed. His neck was broken.

Lamberton.—Knights of Pythias of this section of the state will meet at Lamberton on Nov. 24, when the first rank will be conferred on a hundred applicants from Lamberton, Worthington, Tracy, Lake Benton and Redwood Falls.

BERLIS ON WAY TO SAINT PAUL

SISTER-IN-LAW OF RUSSIAN TRIAL FIGURE TALKS.

Says "Ritual" Murder Charge Was Trumped Up by Government.

St. Paul.—Mendel Berlis, who was the central figure in the recent "ritual" murder trial in Kief, Russia, is on his way to St. Paul to make his home, according to a statement made by Mrs. Sara Dannevski, 112 Minnetonka Street, a sister-in-law of Berliss.

Realizing that to stay in Russia would only mean that in a short while he would be imprisoned or assassinated, Berliss is fleeing to the land where so many of his countrymen also have found new homes.

"For God's sake, don't let them arrest me," screamed Mrs. Dennovski in fear when the interpreter translated the reporter's question as to whether she was a relative of Mendel Berliss. Mrs. Dennovski, between sobs, declared that she knew nothing of the crime of which Berliss was charged. For weeks she had guarded the secret of her relationship, fearing arrest by the local authorities. The fear of government had seized her although she is no longer in danger of the Russian government who ruled her little home in Russia.

When Mrs. Dannovski became convinced that she was in no danger of arrest, she quickly down and discussed quite freely the subject of her relative's arrest and trial. She says that he is making his way carefully to America and will not arrive in St. Paul till about January 1.

She has received news of him at broken intervals through letters from her sister at Kief which were entrusted to immigrants. She says that until three years ago when the census of America she lived next door to Berliss. He was constantly watched. The government suspected him of anarchistic tendencies, she says, and when unable to learn that charge, one of murder was trumped up and he was brought to trial and finally acquitted.

Mrs. Dannevski says the charge that he was guilty of "ritual" murder was absurd. "Mendel was never a religious man," she said through an interpreter. "He did not even attend church. But he was respected alike by Jews and Gentiles. He worked as foreman in the brickyard for years. He and my husband, Isaac, were both watched by police. My husband escaped and came to America three years ago."

GRAND FORKS WITHDRAWS BID

Tri-State Postmasters to Meet in St. Paul in Conjunction With National Gathering.

St. Paul.—Grand Forks has withdrawn its invitation in favor of St. Paul for the 1914 convention of the Tri-State Postmasters' league. This action was taken in view of the fact that the National Postmasters' association meeting will be in this city next year, and it was the desire of the Tri-State organization that their members meet here at the same time.

The Tri-State league embraces Minnesota, North and South Dakota. Since Grand Forks was selected at the 1913 convention for the 1914 meeting, the national meeting in Denver, chose St. Paul for its 1914 convention.

President Plumley and other officers of the Tri-State have promised to take their good offices in bringing the 1915 gathering of the association to Grand Forks, so that city will lose nothing by the change, though it will materially aid the district association, as it will mean a larger attendance.

The North Dakota League of Postmasters, which also selected Grand Forks for its 1914 gathering, will not change its plans. The meeting will be held in Grand Forks about two months previous to the national in St. Paul.

Barnesville Hears Governor.

Barnesville.—Governor Eberhart paid his first visit to Barnesville Tuesday evening and addressed citizens in the opera house. A banquet, to which 300 tickets were sold at $1.50 a plate, was served. The Commercial club, under whose invitation the governor came, did its best to make the occasion significant here.

Glasgow Arsenal Robbed.

St. Paul.—L. Gruman, Chicago diamond merchant, told the police Saturday that he was robbed of diamonds worth $35,000 while in his room on a Pullman car en route to St. Paul from Davenport, Iowa. The diamonds were in a wallet and were unset, according to Grossman.

Glasgow Scenes Mystery Cleared.

Ivy, Minn.—The lifeless body of a farmer by the name of Niemi, aged 50, has been recovered from Rice lake. Niemi, who lived at Burnside near Ivy, was in the city Saturday and did considerable shopping. He took a short-cut across the ice late in the afternoon and broke through not far from shore. His failure to return caused his wife and daughter, who began a search. His cap and a mitten were found on the ice, but it was some time before other searchers were able to recover the body.

Barnesville Potato Shipments.

Barnesville.—One hundred and ninety-eight carloads of potatoes were shipped from this city in September and October. This means that 396,000 bushels were marketed in Barnesville in the two months.

Moorhead.—Miss Eleanor Rashfold, superintendent of schools for Clay county, has filed her resignation with the county commissioners. The resignation is to take effect at the end of the year and the successor will be elected.

Pretty Costume for Club Meeting

FOR the club woman, or one who attends any informal afternoon function, here is a simple and smart costume. It is designed in very conservative lines, but provided with the most popular of the present styles touches to make it acceptable to the most up-to-date wearer.

It is a model especially well adapted to a stout figure. The small coat hangs closer than the majority of those equally smart. Its cut sets the material close to the arm and narrows the shoulders. The sleeves are easy, in straight lines and three-quarter length. There is a deep and rather narrow "V" at the throat, and the basque is long, sloping down toward the back. It is unfinished except for the sewing at the bottom. Thus the long line of the figure is not broken by the separate coat. It is noticeable that all the lines of the coat tend to preserve length of line, in the figure.

The skirt is fuller than the average, with the effect of being a double skirt at the front. It is cut wide enough to allow it to be caught up in plaits at the left knee under a soft cascade of chiffon. A piece is let in at the front, but the split or overlapping breadth is absent and there is worn enough for a comfortable step. At the long seam at the front a little soft white chiffon is let in and a strand of the over-present white beads finishes the neck dress.

The beaded tags at the front with fastening concealed by an inverted "V"-shaped piece of the material. There is a finishing of the skirt at the throat and small ribbon decoration at the right side by way of garniture, a short satin girdle of plaited ribbon fastens with beads and ends at the left side under extremely small made ornaments.

The hat is of hatter's plush, with facing of velvet in black. The paradise wreath in shaded fancy color gives brilliance and distinction to the entire toilette.

It will be noticed that the long gloves are since kid in black. They make the arm look very slender and reduce the apparent size of all hands remarkably. Very thin women should not wear them. High surfaced black is not for them. The sleeves are finished with a band of satin.

To study this costume is more conducive than describing it, since what it has been carefully thought out to be added to the full figure.

The narrow dropping brim of the hat makes the most of the length of the neck, since it does not conceal it. The feather swirl is light, following the brim line almost exactly. The shape is extremely graceful.

It is by such careful thinking out and management of line that grace is "put" at the front in little soft white chiffon is let in and a strand of the over-present white beads finishes the neck dress.

The beaded tags at the front with fastening concealed by an inverted

PARISIAN WOMEN OCCUPIED WITH TWO NEW "FADS"

AT the present moment there are two very prominent fashions governing Paris. One of these is white hair. The other is red fox.

Early last spring there was noticed the growing fashion of wearing powdered hair. And through the summer season one saw the most wonderful, and often very beautiful, heads of all white hair, such hair as one sees at a fancy dress ball. The powdered hair now so fashionable in Paris is, as a rule, in pompadour fashion, the obvious powdered at the sides and in front.

The great drawback to this fashion is its cost. Powdered hair makes considerable demands upon one's toilet, and upon one's personality, generally. It seems to elderly and fat in a special style of dress. It cannot be worn, save in exceptions, by with "just anything."

In the evening these difficulties disappear entirely, for goodness, evening gowns are so ornate and elaborate that they seem to harmonize, naturally, with powder.

As to the second "fad," what can be said? Red foxes are certainly become ubiquitous in Paris. All through last summer, and autumn, the most exclusive Parisian beauties were making sensational successes in white linen and sashs suede costumes, elaborately panied by a brilliant red fox skin, in the shape of a flat tie.

Skins or the ordinary red fox looked all right when adopted as an economic "fad," by ultra smart women, and in conjunction with frantic summer dresses; they looked extremely pretty when adopted as a regular winter fur and worn with the most elaborate suits of cloth and velvet. Nevertheless, the red-fur craze is proving to be a healthy condition. It stems likely to last all through the winter. And the pity of it is that already the shop windows are filled with imitation red-fox skins, worthless furs which have no meaning and which would make any sensible woman laugh. This was, of course, inevitable, but it is a pity it thinks deplorable.

The present combs are large and flat, and the correct thing is to wear them at the back of the head, low down, in Greek style. Some of these combs are of rare beauty. The artistic jewelers of Paris are past masters at work of this kind, and the most wonderful things have been turned out of jade, inset with precious stones, and with turquoise and pearls incrusted with diamonds and traced over with gold.

Sometimes these beautiful combs are accompanied by an elaborate clasp which is more of attention, you are bound to win.

ver hair at the opera, and at the Theater des Champs Elysees, on Russian Ballet nights.

The Parisiennes started this fashion. Then, almost immediately, it was taken up by women of other nations, especially by American beauties.

Now it is the fashion to wear powdered hair in the day time as well as by night. This does not mean pure

SOME GOOD NEIGHBORLY SUGGESTIONS

Give Your Neighbor a Lift.

(By L. M. BENNINGTON.)

If you are a hot freehanded with the late fall work, and a neighbor has had hard luck, why not take the boys and a team over and give him a lift? It will pay big heart interest.

We all have good reason to be thankful that we are living in an age where the farm is more highly regarded as an uplifting factor in civilization than before.

We have never yet seen a farm so small that a good farmer could find no work to be done upon it.

Some men are honest because it pays, and a few because they cannot help it.

The man who will sit baking his back before a fire during stormy weather, while his animals are left to huddle in the lee of a rail fence, has a hard row to hoe in the make-up.

It is the first blizzard that gives the animals a hard set-back. Everything for their protection should be ready against the day.

The man who plants a 50-acre apple orchard now and takes care of it for ten years can have an idea of want in the future.

Keep open the windows of the sleeping room—pile on the blankets, and keep the fires going all night, if necessary. Warm air can be pure as well as cold air.

The man who fails to cut ice in the winter does not cut much ice with his ice tools all any season.

No matter if our neighbor is too lazy to do his share of dragging the road. We must drag it ourselves, and we can better afford to ignore him than to miss good markets on account of poor roads.

You can generally tell the quality of farmer by the fence he keeps.

He is a bad man who will allow his wife to hang out wet clothes in freezing weather.

SULPHUR HARMFUL TO YOUNG CHICKS

Lard Grease Alone Is Quite Effective in Destroying Head Lice on Youngsters.

(By A. J. LEGG.)

It has twice come under my observation that sulphur and grease need upon young chicks to kill head-lice with the full figure.

Only a few days ago a woman mixed sulphur with hog's lard and greased under the wings of hens that were destructed with the brooding of 40 young chicks.

The grease and sulphur killed all but one of the young chicks.

Lard without sulphur is quite as effective in destroying the head lice, but it should be applied carefully and in small quantities.

The lice cannot live in grease, and life almost as soon as the grease touches them. Two or three applications are sufficient to rid a brood effectually of head lice.

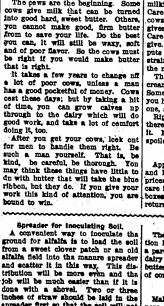
The applications should be a week or ten days apart.

SHOULD PROVIDE SUITABLE COOPS

Chickens Generally Seek the Same Roosting Place and Carry Insects With Them.

Poultry, roosting in trees, is not exempt from insect enemies. This has been proved by the experience of many who have had chests of sawing poultry. An examination of the flesh of trees where the young flocks roost at night, before the birds have been parded and housed for the winter, will show countless numbers of mites resting under the loose bark. Chickens generally seek the same roosting place night after night, and carry insects with them. The tree becomes infested and the vermin in a few days time destroy a large number, finally sapping the vitality of the birds. Than farmers wonder why food does not fatten. When birds are old enough to "climb trees" they should be placed in coops that can be easily disinfected and kept in a sanitary condition, if the best financial results are expected.

SUGGESTIONS FOR MAKING GOOD BUTTER



Milking by Electricity.

Gilt-edge butter can come only from gilt-edged fingers.

Cream is the beginning. Some cows give milk that can be turned into good hard, sweet butter. Others can make only good, fine butter. Start to save your life. Do the best you can, it will still be waxy, soft and of poor flavor. So the cows must be made if you would make butter that is right.

It takes a few years to change off a lot of poor cows, unless a man has a good pocketful of money. Cows that come of dairy stock will, in time, you can grow calves up from them. Cows are the mills of good work, and take a lot of comfort doing it, too.

You can get your cows, look out for men to handle them right. Be sure a man knows. That is, be kind, be careful, be thorough. You may think these things have little to do with butter that will take the blue ribbon, but they do. If you give your cows this kind of attention, you are bound to win.

Take pains. Where! Care in having the cows nice and clean at milking time. Be careful yourself. Care in handling the udder of the cows gently. The cow that feels good likes most milk and the best milk. Care in getting all the cow has to give. It is the last few streams that puts the money in your pail. Care in straining the milk and getting it to milkhouse.

The way milk is separated from cream makes a lot of difference, too. Somehow you must skim clean. If you have a separator, let it be a good one, and learn how to run it right.

Ripen your cream in a place where there will be just about right heat in it. More butter than we know of is spoiled by hasty ripened cream.

Scarcity of Apples.

Apples are scarce in many sections and local markets are paying good prices. It may pay to exercise special care in marketing in barrels or basket when packed. Small baskets would return a larger profit.

Spreader for Inoculating Soil.

A convenient way to inoculate the ground for alfalfa is to load the soil from a sweet clover patch or old on alfalfa field into the manure spreader and scatter it in this way. This distribution will be more even and the job will be much easier than if it is done with a shovel. Two or three loades of straw should be laid in the spreader first so that the soil will not be scattered along the road.

The last time to put on the inoculated soil is late in the afternoon.

Spy Meal for Cows.

The Pennsylvania experiment station has discovered that rye meal as a part of properly balanced ration for dairy cows is sufficient in milk and butter production to an equal weight of corn meal.

Push Dairy and Poultry.

Make the dairy and poultry business fairly hum during the winter months, while there is no field work to be done and you can give these industries your undivided attention.

CLEANING UP THE DAIRY.

If the grocer sells canned fruit that is not up to the standard set by the health authorities, he is "pinched." There are a hundred and one articles that he sells that he must be sure are up to the standard. He cannot sell refined brown sugar syrup for Vermont maple. He cannot sell oleomargarine and call it butter.

Recently it was determined that a saloon keeper cannot sell "short jests" of whiskey and get away with it—that is, without being required to answer for the short measure.

The butcher must be sure that what he offers for sale has been prepared for the market with due respect for the regulations regarding sanitation.

Do you remember that ten-cent sell of "raspberry jelly"—or any other flavor you might desire—on the market for seventy-five cents, the pail being worth a quarter and the "jelly" presumed to be worth the difference. It was not the high cost of living that forced the jelly pail out of existence. It was the pure food authorities.

In fact the pure food authorities have been getting after most everything and everybody—and handling them rather roughly at times—except the great producer of the material, the great American farmer.

It has been the presumption that the raw material is always the pure material and that is about true.

But there is an exception to that presumption, if the product of the dairy farm may be called raw material, and the Minnesota pure food authorities, having cleaned up most everything else, are now turning their attention to the dairies.

The dairies are being inspected and records of the inspections made and if they do not come to the standard decided as necessary to make their products healthful, the dairyman must suffer the consequences.

The large dairies that furnish the milk supply for the large cities are being inspected first and the smaller dairies over the state will be inspected as the work progresses. The inspection of the large dairies indicated some conditions most startling and the inspection of some of the smaller ones seem to have indicated conditions about as bad in proportion.

This campaign for cleanliness is not without reason. The dairy farmer produces articles that go to the tables of practically every family in the land. That these articles should be produced among surroundings that are reasonably sanitary is a matter of public concern.

You may not know it—but the in some tax it now dips and payable.

In spite of the many efforts to bring the black sheep to earth, you may be sure that he is going to do some scoring during the next campaign.

Candidate Iverson is doing some efficient missionary work on Andrew for Iverson's handselling tour—and it won't be necessary to charge anything against Candidate Iverson's campaign expense account.

President Wilson is going to "rest out", the New Year's reception and a few other trimmings. One may suspect that the president is going to be a candidate for re-election on an "efficiency and economy" platform.

How could the progressives expect to win with the great leader "taking a hike away?" They were only skirmishes, anyway. The great battle is not to fought until after the "triumphal home-coming" of the great captain.

No other effort or enterprise has resulted in so much good to northern Minnesota as the work of the Northern Minnesota Development association and there is much that the association can do and will do during the next few years. The meeting to be held at Bemidji Dec. 4 and 5 is of so much importance that Red Lake county cannot afford to be without representation.

"Go Lightly" Morrill, the Minneapolis clergyman who goes about his business in a rather sensational manner, recently preached from the subject, "To Hell and Back." A lot of fellows will be glad to know that it is possible to come back.

It is sure that having appendicitis is very much of a luxury and that Champion Champion spoke wisely when he said if a surgeon could remove our vanity as easily as one is relieved by a lot more money in the savings bank.

Government surveyors, who have just been checking up some of the lines reputed to have been run by George Washington in his day of chain and compass work, have found them good. Of course, the work was a useless expense, for no one who knows that "hatchet story" should have questioned the accuracy of the work of the "father of his country."

The work of the Northern Minnesota Development association is becoming so important that people and towns are laying claim to the distinction of having made the movement that resulted in the organization. Too often good work is hampered by the effort to determine to whom the glory for the good work belongs.

Moorhead News: Thomas A. Erickson, who has yielded to the opportunities of his wife and will quit working all night.

Browns Valley Tribune: Some farmers are so up-to-date that they were running water in the house while their wives have to run to the barn to get water for the house.

Hibbing Tribune: Don't worry about anybody's taking the Panama canal away from us. We will take a lot of nerve and more steamboats than Panama has got to even attempt the job.

Stillwater Gazette: Naturally there is a demand for low-priced automobiles, but as a rule the buyer secures the highest-priced car he can pay for. We understand from friends that it actually requires cash in order to secure possession of a car which is the chief reason why many still walk.

Crosby Crucible: One week from next Monday will be Thanksgiving, and while we are preparing for the big feed let us look about and see if there is not some unfortunate who will not have so well unless we share up with them. Some of us have so much to be thankful for, but there are those less fortunate, and we can give the day more meaning by making it truly a Thanksgiving time for them.

"For sweet charity's sake" the face cards in the Grand Forks social directory with someone evening pull off what is dubbed as the most important social function of the season. It is the charity ball, at which the high-brows of the city may disport themselves in plaid rags while the destitute may scrape a few crumbs after gowns, cut flowers, taxis, music, frappe and ball room have been paid for. Sufficient enough, there are some who naturally take this burlesque on charity as a real social proposition.—Excelsior Grand Forks Weekly Record.

ASSOCIATED CHARITIES WARN AGAINST A FAKE CHARITY.

The public is hereby warned against certain women who have been soliciting funds in various parts of the state for a so-called orphanage in Kansas City, Mo., known as the Walter-Baker Home or the Joseph-Walter Home, of which Miss Julia Anna Walter-Baker is the manager.

The character of this organization is such that the Associated Charities of Kansas City have refused their indorsement as being unworthy of support. It is well known that Mrs. Baker and her associates, a few years ago, were compelled to leave Kansas City on account of a fake charity and afterward were refused indorsement in Wisconsin for the same reason.

Sometimes these women solicit for the Children's Home Society, claiming to take the place of our regular representatives. We warn this scheme to work the public against these persons as having no authority from us or connection with us.

To avoid being imposed upon in regard to the Walter-Baker Home, Kansas City, Kansas, address Secretary, Associated Charities, Kansas City, Mo.

MINNESOTA, THE BIG CORN STATE

THIS STATE HAS THE HIGH AVERAGE YIELD FOR 1913.

	Acre average Total yield. (Bushels)		(Bushels)
	1911	1912	1913
Minnesota	40.0	34.6	84,280,000
Wisconsin	40.5	35.7	56,038,000
Iowa	34.0	43.0	338,166,000
Illinois	37.0	40.0	284,472,000
So. Dakota	25.5	35.7	56,810,000
Nebraska	35.0	34.0	114,138,000

Minnesota's crop yield for 1913 leads the nation, and Minnesota as a corn state stands at the top of the list, according to figures issued by the Department of Agriculture.

Minnesota and Wisconsin lead in the average yield of corn to the acre, with Minnesota far in advance of the Badger state in point of acreage and total yield and a difference in the average yield on acres of only one-half bushel. Iowa and Illinois, long known as the champion corn states of the nation, have fallen far behind Minnesota this year, and the state's gain would be important anticipated by crop experts, is a surprise even to the most optimistic booster. The total corn crop in Minnesota in 1913 was 84,280,000 bushels, a gain of 16,193,000 over last year. The quality of the crop is 24 as compared with 82 last year.

Not only in corn does Minnesota lead, but the state stands first in total yield of all crops, as compared with the average yields for recent years. Minnesota's 1913 yield stands at 114.6 as compared with the average of all crops for recent years. Only Arizona with 136, has a higher average.

Wisconsin	114.6
Iowa	102.4
Illinois	89.0
Nebraska	79.0
South Dakota	81.8
North Dakota	82.2

A favorable season with plenty of rainfall, fairly well distributed, made possible for farmers to get as much as the results of their seed selection and the agricultural propaganda.

Minnesota now has a better crop of pure seed corn for the country to-day than it has had for many years, and with normal weather conditions next year should enjoy still greater production.

Minnesota corn has averaged 40 bushels to the acre this year according to reports received by Fred D. Sherman, commissioner of immigration. "I have made a special effort to secure accurate figures on Minnesota's crops this year, and believe these figures are very conservative estimates."

Special blanks together with a letter of instruction were sent to reliable men in every county in the state. These men reporting the yields conferred with farmers and business men in different parts of the county and based their estimates accordingly. It would seem that they well posted men, -y communicating with reliable men in different parts of the county would furnish a very accurate estimate of crop yields in his respective county.

The acreage for the various counties, not the state, was reached by estimates of a percentage increase or decrease in the different counties, using the last census report as a basis to figure from. The following figures tell the story of Minnesota's corn crop for 1913:

Total acreage, 2,438,016.

Average yield per acre, 42 bushels.

Total production, 102,432,972 bushels.

In 1912 Minnesota corn averaged 34.6 bushels per acre. In 1911 corn averaged 38.7 and in 1910 32.7 bushels per acre. These figures are taken from the United States Government report. It will be noted that there has been a steady increase in corn yields for the past four years. Figures for this year show an increase of 7.5 bushels per acre over last year's United States government report.

ONCE A FAST, NOT A FEAST.

Thanksgiving Was Not Fetal to Turkeys in Early Days.

Turkey did not figure in the original Thanksgiving feast, but it became a feature of that historic meal so long ago that the reason is lost to oblivion.

On the original Thanksgiving day the pilgrim fathers fretted and gave verbal thanks that they had been saved from the perils of the sea and permitted to build a home in the new land, filling up every cort of occupation and steadying the time in Bible reading and in prayer. Devotion regarded it as an annual occasion of much solemnity.

It was not until thirteen years after the settling of Massachusetts that Thanksgiving day received official cognizance, although it was generally observed by churchgoing and—after a few years of stern fighting—better diet than was served on week days. Then by decrees the feature of the great day became the dinner that accompanied it.

A Candy Cornucopia.

A cornucopia formed of peanut or white candy makes an effective table decoration at Thanksgiving and has the added advantage that the children can break it up and eat it afterward. It may be filled with candied oranges and grapes, marrons glaces and other sweets.

CORN BELT IS MOVING NORTH

MINNESOTA SHOWS A SUBSTANTIAL GAIN IN ACREAGE AND IN YIELD.

A discrepancy of less than 6 per cent of the acreage corn yield for Minnesota is found between the government figures and the estimates made by Iowa immigration commissioner F. D. Sherman, both of which were given out recently. In the total yield the discrepancy is less than 10 per cent. That the figures come so closely together is evidence that both are substantially correct and both show a substantial gain both in the average and total yield for Minnesota, farm experts say.

The government figures give Minnesota an average yield of 40 bushels to the acre. Mr. Sherman estimated 42 per cent. The government estimated the total yield in the state at 84,280,000 bushels and Mr. Sherman estimated 102,432,000 bushels. Both reports are made from estimates by farmers and others in the different counties of the state.

For purposes of comparison with former years, however, the government figures furnish the better basis, as the reports this year and last were made at the same period of time. The government figures show an increase from 34.6 to 40 in average yield, or about 16 per cent, and an increase in total yield from 56,810,000 to 84,280,000 or about 17 per cent.

That the Minnesota corn belt is moving north is indicated by Mr. Sherman's figures. Every county in the state showed the largest improved acreage of 40 bushels for the seven-year period as indicated by the government crop reports. Short yields were on record when 2,300 acres.

"The preliminary report on the corn crops for the present year is conclusive evidence that Minnesota soon will hold first place in the states in the production of corn," said Ben Simpson, secretary of the Minnesota State Fair. "Indeed our acreage of 40 bushels for the present year, as indicated by the government crop reports, is short again, grew an average of 48½ bushels an acre on more than 1

The new up-to-the-minute roller process of grinding feed saves you one-half of what it now costs you to feed your stock. Will grind twice as fast with same power, as the best burr or stone mill ever made and does not heat the feed. Has great capacity, very simple, grinds fine or coarse, requires little power, has no burrs or other parts to be constantly wearing out, also grinds corn-meal and graham. Will last a life-time. Made in all sizes from the smallest to the largest. Sold with or without engine. Big money in custom grinding. The Roller Mill Way is the only way.

Accordiog to W. O. Calderwood of Minneapolis, who heads the prohibition forces in Minnesota, the Anti-Saloon league has thrown into the discard country option and other schemes for the curtailment of the activities of the saloon and from now on will have complete prohibition as its slogan. He attended the convention of the national organization at Columbus, O., and prohibition was the sentiment throughout. This means, he says that the league and the prohibition forces will once more be on friendly terms, as their cause is now one. All that the best of the prohibition forces in Minnesota ask regarding the league may be true, but many will doubt the slaughter by the league of the geese that had the golden eggs for these many years. In the palmy days the league gave employment to many and not a few of its leaders became rich. One thing is to be said of the Prohibition party —those who follow its banner are on the square. They have a principle and stand by it even to the face of continual defeat.

Capitol circles continues to be puzzled in the matter of the recent filing by D. W. Lawler of St. Paul for the democratic gubernatorial nomination. Following the registration of his name Mr. Lawler, who ordinarily does not side his light under the proverbial bushel, went into hiding and there has been a perfect dearth of him since. The only statement made by him was that he would tell the voters a few things about the first of the year. It has been pretty fairly established that Mr. Lawler's entrance into the game is not in any way in the interest of National Committeeman F. B. Lynch and his followers. R. T. O'Connor and his crowd early made when Lawler's name was mentioned. Mr. Lynch, it is known, has a leaning toward Representative Pfaender of New Ulm and if he plays the game as successfully as he has in the past Pfaender will be in it if he cares to run.

Whether Governor Eberhart believes that his almost daily acceptance of speechmaking invitations from places within and outside the state are really part of his official duty, or that he does it for the advertising it brings him, puzzles many who have been watching his meteoric career for the past four years. How he stands it appeals to them the most. When the state drainage commission toured the northern part of the state recently he was a member of the party and those composing it had an excellent opportunity to size up on his strenuous qualities. The trip, with its cross country walks, constant changes of beds, rough roads and chilly winds was a heart breaking one, yet Governor Eberhart never completed. He was the first up and the last to be bed and he never failed when called upon for a public talk. The arm of a current office seemed his for a pillow. He could woo slumber most anywhere.

FEED YOUR COWS WELL.

Proper Feeding May Make the Difference Between Profit and Loss.

"It sometimes happens that farmers are in possession of extra good cows, but realizing the small amount of feed required by cows giving a large yield, they are soon allowed to shrink in milk because the same is given does not provide sufficient nutriment. While cows in good condition can, for a time, give more milk than the feed provides, by drawing upon the fat stored in the body, yet if the grain is but gradually increased as the cows lose in body weight, there will soon follow an abnormal shrinkage in milk flow, and also a decrease in the quality of milk yielded."

We take this suggestion from Feeding Dairy Cows by T. L. Haecker, published free as Bulletin 120 by the Agricultural Experiment Station, University Farm, St. Paul. This bulletin will aid those who wish to make the most effective and economical use of Minnesota feeds for cows.

GET-RICK-QUICK WALLINGFORD

TWO CLEVER CROOKS "TRIMMED" NORTH DAKOTA FARMER AT CROOKSTON.

Ole Nelson is out $3,000 in cash, but, is ahead a lot of experience as a result of meeting two crooks in Crookston last Saturday. Nelson, who is a rich farmer near Mapleton, N. D., met a stranger there named Fred L. Turner, who told Nelson that he had a fine bunch of cattle in Crookston. The two came here and Turner took Nelson to the Grent Northern stock yards in Carmen and showed him a fine bunch of cattle which belonged to Watkins Bros., of this city. A deal was made for 65 head, and Nelson paid Turner $2,700 in cash, and gave a check for $350 more.

Nelson was going to ship the stock to his farm at Mapleton. Turner did not want him to stir up things by ordering a car and attempting to ship Watkins Bros.' cattle, so he had his confederate, a man named Carter, happen along and start talking cattle. The three made a trip to the stock yards again and Carter offered Nelson $4,000 for his cattle.

Nelson thought $1,000 clear profit in one day was good enough for a plug farmer from North Dakota, and accepted the offer. Returning to the Grand Central Hotel, Carter told Nelson that he had $8,000 in the bank at Euclid, and that he was certified to call up over the phone and let Nelson hear the conversation so he could be sure the money was there all right. He stepped to the booth and got him he call. A moment later he showed Nelson a bank draft conversation he had with the Bank of Euclid, while Carter was in reality talking to one confederate, Turner who stepped at the Hotel Crookston.

Nelson, however, was satisfied, and took Carter's check for $4,000 which he said he would hold till Monday, till Carter could go to Euclid and have his certificate of deposit changed to a checking account.

Nelson, thoroughly pleased with his shrewd deal,by which he thought he had made $1,000 easy money returned to Crookston Saturday night and Monday presented the check for deposit at the Cass County National Bank there. President John Gunkel of the bank, to make sure of the check, called up J. S. Chapin, of the Euclid State Bank and was advised by Mr. Chapin that neither Tanner nor Carter had any money deposited there at any time, were not known there, and no one had ever known of them.

The sheriff of Cass county took the matter up and learned that Watkins Bros., owned the cattle all the time, despite the sales, and it was Tanner, who had been stopping at the Hotel Crookston, and Carter, who stopped at the Grand Central, had left Saturday night, after paying their bills, and nothing has since been seen or heard of them.

Sheriff Kelley received but poor descriptions of the two confederates. Tanner is said to be short and the other short and heavy set. As both had ample time to get away, little hope is entertained of ever landing them.—Crookston Times.

A Thanksgiving Worth While

By JENNIE FOWLER-WILLING

© 1913, by American Press Association.

THE merry sleighbells mocked the dismal agony of the snow crouching over the dying fire. The gaily harnessed horses champed down the chimney, throwing gigs and sulkys into her face. She muttered bracing herself with her hand as she fell asleep. "Now's my only time!"

When they were coming home from the "big ground" and Melville turned down Beird street she knew that would be the last of him till he'd stop off his agent.

Something pulled so hard at her heartstrings they seemed ready to snap. He was such a splendid fellow when they were married. She chose as if in an aqua fit, muttering to keep up her courage, "I must seize my hour!"

She raised her haggard face and bit back a stifling sob. "O God, I've done my very best for Melville, but I've failed—failed—failed! I can only turn him over to thee!"

She peered around the room in the dim light. Her wedding presents made a cozy nest of it at first, but they had all gone to the pawnshop.

Miss Maude always had the knack o' fixin' things up, her old farmer father had said. "Took after her mother. Make a silver hangnest out of a bunch o' mayweed or a mullein stalk when anybody else could whit pleies'n' illies."

She smiled bitterly over the dear little flattery while she packed her old suit case, even thanking God that her father and mother were safe in his bosom. "They'll keep poor baby from being afraid of the newness—and I must save my boy!"

She took from its hiding place the $200 she had been paid for the old farm things. That would take her and little Merlie to Aggie Duncan, down in Texas, and she'd trust God for the rest. Judge Tremaine's folks would take care of Melville as long as he lasted. Another great sob!

In three awful hours alone with her dying baby she had wrought out her problem. A setting of Melliers old hat before the locomotive when the express slowed for the bridge, tossing it into the water with her old shawl, o clutch her up the steps of the last car and a cocktail into a seat by the door.

It never entered the heads of the train crew that the dozing woman with the sleeping little boy in her lap and stopped the train.

After dragging the river for the missing bodies the "Herald" gave them this: Four Miss Maudes! The loss of her baby had driven her crazy, and she had drowned herself and her boy.

Miss Maude! The name always brought up at the house of James Duncan, the dear, dumpy little babyqueen of a huge sized home mischief, whose heart, everybody said, was "as big as all outdoors."

Their landlord of a manse was hooked to the eaves with babies and nappikins. The small lady had a few more little lovestarents, the latest so much she knew would come in handy when she "threw herself away" on big Jim Pearce.

"See here, Miss Maude," chirpered Miss Agnes after the tornado of yelling pandemonium was over, "I guess you'll have to take hold of Jack's job. Three poor cowboys almost worship a vegetable garden. And then the settlers' homes—they have to be awfully organized. I can't go with them very often on account of the babies. He'll get you a good pony and turn you loose on them, and, say, Maude, can you'll do them! A special providence, I call it!"

Miss Maude smiled as the immediate had revised herself. Providence, the queer kind of providence, she thought! But she fell into line and was soon galloping over pink meadows, a full sized headstone in the settlers' homes and the backbone of the newest school-house Sunday school, to which the cowboys flocked for miles around for to hear Miss Maude. She was even put on from the seat."

One Sabbath Mrs. Agnes crimsoned to the roots of her hair with the terrible "sacrilege" of telling the Sunday school folks about the "boy" they were going to love, to put up a lean-to, with a porch for him to swing in, and no impertinent dent a living room, and would they all come? And there she hadn't any women folks of their own to bring to help her get the dinner and maybe might bring somebody else's, and Mr. Duncan was over on Forty Mile run or he'd give it out, and they'd all come just the same and have a mighty good time, putting up the new Sunday school lode's lean-to.

When Miss Maude climbed up on the rear car of the express, after throwing her old shawl and her boy's hat into the car, she was a changed girl. The night of the baby's funeral, she was sure she would die before morning, but when Mrs. Agnes told Jack the next day the news was announced of the "boy" Miss Maude had to put the frills on the story. Jack Duncan caught his mother in the barn, with a baby or two thrown in for good measure, and a cowboy on either side, accompanying his frail throated American "boy" in a hearty shouting melody—we don't love to preach, mommy and me. We're going to farm it!"

Then all joined, big and little, in the chorus of laughter, and then came near being a riot of hugs and kisses.

Miss Maude, with the help of the second generation of Duncans and her correspondence with the "back to the soil" men men of Washington, made the manse ten acre lot bud and blossom as the rose. Many a good blue did she give the settlers and their wives that made her word on "farming it" was the piece of their "rule of thumb" methods.

Dad Wetherell, a thoroughgoing Methodist backslum, with his eye on the legislature, nothwel her post, trips upstairs while she took notes in the "lecture car" and increased the frequency of his visits at the manse.

One day he surprised Miss Agnes about her friend's widowhood, quite shocking her for making her ill it were "out of grass."

Miss Maude heard only the word "widow," but it sent the "creeps" up and down her skin. After that Dan Wetherell and Miss Agnes had tried to win one of Greufe's Labrador pups.

Miss Agnes was the only one who knew the Dunneus, even to the mysterious disappearance of Merlie by Jerome soon after her own. Everybody had given him up for dead; to whom Maude, who held stubbornly the hope that she would see him agnt. Her eyes were on the same fallow field he was when she first knew him. Having been through the ordeal herself and knowing how they always thought along the same lines when he was himself, she looked for him to come in her —permanently redeemed.

One evening a day or two before Thanksgiving John Duncan came home from a two weeks' trip. He was silent and absentminded, though the small house was fairly there with merriment. Agnes' usual expedient of trying to divert him from his abstraction was to ask him about Texas.

"No, Jack. Who?" certain that the mystery of his abstraction was about to unravel itself.

"Melville Tremaine."

"No, Jack. He's dead."

a long shot! The liveliest ... for some days! Stayed all night with him! Told me the whole story!"

"Jack Duncan, what are you saying! Didn't he drink himself to death?"

"Tried to, Maude. He made a heft, but the Salvatio Army folks down there in the city got hold of him."

"Oh, Jack! And didn't he drink now?"

Potential to the backbone! What the poor cowboys get over the last drink they'll drink! Not a chance to get to him. When the Lord makes a man over the job one's he improved, specially such a one as Mel Tremaine."

"Did you inform him about Mrs. —h he?"

... a mighty close work to get ... but, for she's uppermost in his ... now ... but I told him myself, and I'll trust all hands to one big earthquake! He'll never sleep for it. He said: 'I ... her conscience. She'll never ... led without a pood, straight ... re-drowning the boy too! Even ... 'thing she said once, she's sure ... the widest. I'll find her yet ... y business is to make myself worthy of her love.' My heart ached to tell him the whole story, but I thought he could wait a day or two longer and we'd have one good, old surprise down here where things don't often happen. He remained to come to our Thanksgiving dinner. He'd well fixed on it.

Little Mrs. Aggie was laughing and crying and kissing her face to shine in front. Then her housekeeperliness came to her help. "There'll be a lot o' things in the Thanksgiving box, and Mrs. Maude has been fattening one of the nurseries. Then come a relapse and another outburst: "Oh, Jackie, Jackie! But you'll have a Thanksgiving worth while!"

Be Thankful Anyway.

The real, original and genuine Thanksgiving dinner must boast a turkey and cranberry sauce. If it is to be strictly orthodox in regard to the menu. Next to that in importance to the mince or pumpkin pie.

Yet if none of these things is forthcoming it is well to be thankful anyway. In the words of that wise old Pennsylvania philosopher, Benjamin Franklin:

"We will thank God that we have bread and butter to eat, and if we have, no matter we will thank God for the bread."

SYNOPSIS.

Minnie, spring-house girl at Hope summerboarding house, is engaged to Dick Allister, son of Mrs. Allister, proprietress, which the latter does not approve. Minnie's father is arrested on a counterfeiting charge. Later you must appear in a better dress." Minnie's acquittal establishes her innocence. Dick's father, who had been missing, returns. Minnie is happy in the belief that she will be married in her own home.

CHAPTER III.—Continued.

At half past five I just about gave up. It was dark outside, and nothing inside but firelight. Suddenly I seemed to feel somebody looking at the back of my neck and I turned around. There was a man standing outside one of the windows, staring in.

My first thought, of course, was that it was Mr. Dick, but just as the face vanished I saw that it wasn't. It was older by three or four years than Mr. Dick's and a bit fuller.

I'm not nervous. I've had to hold my own against chronic grouchos too long to have nerves, so I went to the door and looked out. The man came around the corner just then and I could see him plainly in the firelight. He was covered with snow, and he wore a sweater and no overcoat, but he looked like a gentleman.

"I beg your pardon for saying," he said, "but the fire looked so snug! I've been trying to get in the back door over there, but in the dark I've lost the path."

"That's not a hotel," I snapped, for that touched me on the raw. "That's Hope Springs Sanitarium, and this is one of the springs. You'd better come in and get warm."

He shot the door behind him and came over to the fire.

"I'm pretty well frozen," he said. "Don't be astonished if I melt before your eyes! I've been walking for hours."

Now that I had a better chance to see him I'd sized up that dream look around his mouth.

"Missed your luncheon, I suppose," I said, poking the fire log. He grinned rather sheepishly.

"Well, I haven't had any, and I've certainly missed it," he said. "Fasting's healthy, you know."

"Nothing's healthy that isn't natural," I declared. "If you'd care for a dish of buttered and salted pop-corn, there's some on the mantel. It's very healthy; the idea is to make folks thirsty so they'll enjoy the mineral water."

"Think of raising a thirst only to drown it with spring water!" he said. But he got the pop-corn and he ate it all. If he hadn't had any luncheon he hadn't had much breakfast. The queer part was—he was a gentleman; his clothes were the right sort, but he had no patent leather shoes in all that snow and no automobile cap.

I put away the glass while he ate. Pretty soon he looked up and the dream lines were gone. He wasn't like Mr. Dick, but he was the same type, only taller and heavier built.

"And as it isn't a hotel," he remarked, "well, I'm sorry. The carpenter in the village is not in my liking, and I had thought of engaging a suite up here. My secretary usually attends to these things, but—don't take away all the glasses, Hebe—but your parade—but the thirst is coming."

He filled the glass himself and then he came up and stood in front of me. With the glass held to his lips he said:

"To the best woman I have met in many days," he said, not mocking but serious. "I was about to lie down and let the little birds cover me with leaves." Then he glanced at the empty dish and smiled. "To buttered popcorn! Long may it wave!" he said, and emptied the glass.

Well, I found a couple of apples in my pantry and brought them out, and after he ate them he told me what had happened to him. He had been a little of everything since he left college—he was about twenty-five—and he crossed the Atlantic in a caboot and gone with somebody or other into some part of Africa—they got lost and had to eat each other or lizards, or something like that—and then he went to the Philippines, and got stuck there and had to work his way back home. He had a little money, "enough for a portable," he said, and all his clothes were dead. Then a college friend of his wrote a rural play called "Sweet Peas"—"Great title, don't you think?" he asked—and he put up all the money. It would have been a hit, he said, but the kid in the play—the one that smiles in parents to the last act just before he dies of tuberculosis—the kid took the mumps and looked as if, instead of feeding away, he was going to blow up. Everybody was so afraid of—not that they let him die about three weeks in the middle of the stage. Then the leading woman took the mumps, and the sheriff took everything else.

Well, of course, the thing failed, and he'd been every dollar and put into it, which was all he had, including the money he got for his clothes.

"They seized my trunks," he explained, "and I sold my full-lined overcoat for eight dollars, which took me on the girls book home. It's hard for the women. A fellow can always get some sort of a job—I was coming up here to see if they needed an extra clerk or a waiter, or chauffeur, or anything that meant a roof and something to eat—but I suppose they don't need a jack-of-all-trades."

"No," I answered, "but I'll tell you what I think they're going to need. And that's an owner!"

I'm not making excuses. I did it for the best. If Mr. Stanley had not been there, sitting by to see the old sanatorium die so it could sprout weeds and fly as a summer hotel, I'd never have thought of it. But I was in despair.

I got up and opened the door, but the snow came in in a heap, and the path was half a foot deep again.

But the angel of providence appeared in the shape of Mike, the bath man, coming down through the snow on a bearing rope. The instant I saw him Mike I knew it was settled.

"Am I or am I not to give Mr. Moody a sensible shower?" he shouted, almost beside himself. And I saw in his hand his overcoat over his bath costume, which is Turkish towel.

"A needle shower followed by a salt rub," said I. "He's been having them for eleven years. What's the matter?"

"That fool of a young doctor," shouted Mike, "is down before he's left that if he'd been taking them for eleven years he'd have any better it was time to stop. Ain't business like enough—only four people in the house taking baths regular—without his butlin' in!"

"Where's Mr. Moody?"

"In the bath. I've locked up his clothes."

"You give him a needle shower and a salt rub," I ordered, "and if he kicks, tell him he's got food for six months. I'll add, as he started out, "ask Mr. Van Alstyne to come out here immediately."

Mr. Van Alstyne came right on the run, and when he saw Mr. Pierce by the fire—that was his name, Alan Pierce—he stopped and stared. Then he said:

"You infernal young cheek!" And with that Mr. Pierce jumped up, scrambled and pretty near fell, and Mr. Van Alstyne saw his mistake.

"I'm sure I beg your pardon!" he said. "For the life of me I can't recognize somebody else, and in the firelight—"

"You surprised me, that's all," said Mr. Pierce. "Under the circumstances I'm glad I'm not the other chap."

"Mr. Van Alstyne," I said, Mr. Stein grimly. "You're not unlike him, by the way, about the eyes, but still I—but—"

Now it's all very well for Mr. Stein to say I originated the idea and all that, but as truly as I am writing this, Mr. Van Alstyne's face fell. He evidently thought come into it. He looked Mr. Pierce over from head to foot. He stared into the fire and puckered his mouth to whistle, then he didn't. And finally he glanced at me, but I was looking at the fire, too.

Then he got up and began to walk the floor, his hands in his pockets. He tried not to look at my eye, but still looked to the fire.

Then he's held up, my Minnie," he said. "The night o'clock train is already behind the junction, in a drift. Mr. Pierce, the conductor, and Carter isn't in it."

"Well?" said I.

"If we could only get post to-day," Mr. Van Alstyne went on, "Thorburn would only choke to death, or—if there was somebody around who looked like Dick, I dare say, by to-morrow—" He looked at Mr. Pierce, who smiled and shook his head.

"And I resemble Dick!" said Mr. Pierce. "Well, if he's a moral and young man—"

"He isn't!" Mr. Sam broke in carefully. And then and there he sat down and told Mr. Pierce the troubles he was in, and what sort of cheerful idiot Dicky Carter was. And during it Mr. Pierce told about the play and the mumps, and how he was stranded. When Mr. Sam asked him outright if he'd like Mr. Dick's place overnight he agreed at once.

Just as they'd got it arranged that Mr. Pierce was not Mr. Dick he came overcoat and walk down to the village so that he could come up in a sleigh, as if he had driven over from Yorkville—he only to walk across the hall in front of the office, when he called up, just enough to show himself and then go to bed with a chill—just as it was all arranged, Mr. Sam thought of something.

"The house people are waiting for Dick," he said to me, "and about forty women are crocheting to the lobby, so they'll be sore to see him. Won't you, Miss Virginia, stroll over and get him?"

I thought pretty fast.

"I'm afraid I haven't been around much lately," I said. "Nobody would know except Mr. Stein, and he's—he's—"

"Yon can't get her out of the house for an hour," he objected, but in a weak voice.

"I can!" I said firmly.

(I did. Inside of an hour she went to the clerk, Mr. Slocum, and handed in her resignation. She was a mucky person, but I did not say all that was quoted. I did-not say the kitchen was filthy; I only said it took away my appetite to look in at the door. But she left, which is the point.)

Well, I stood in the doorway and watched them disappear in the darkness, and I felt better than I had all day. It's great to be able to do something, even if that something is wrong. But as I put on my shawl and turned out the lights, I suddenly remembered, Miss Patty would be waiting in the lobby for Mr. Dick, and she would not be crocheting!

CHAPTER IV.

Whoever has charge of the spring-house at Hope Springs has the news stand in the evening. That's an old rule.

After I ate my supper I relieved Amanda King, who runs the news stand in the daytime, when she isn't laid off with the toothache. Mr. Sam was ready for me when I got there, with their puffs, and they were sitting in a half-circle on each side of the door. Mrs. Sam was there, looking frightened and anxious, and standing near the cardroom door was Miss Patty. She was all in white, with two red spots on her cheeks, and I thought that her prices could have seen her then she would pretty nearly have eaten her cap.

Mr. Sam came to the news stand, and he was so nervous he could hardly light a cigarette.

"I've got a message from one of the detectives," he said. "They've traced him to Selem, Ohio, but they lost him there. If we can only hold on this evening—I can't trust the sleigh!"

Everybody had heard it. The women

"You Infernal Young Scamp!"

sat up and craned forward to look at the door; Mr. Sam was sitting on the ward clutching the arms of her chair. Just as he got to the door he opened and looked for that sweeling, with a red rose pinned on her so Mr. Pierce would know her. Here Patty's color and sleighbells also, and she turned and looked toward the door. Her mouth was set hard, and she was twisting her ring on and around, which she was nervous. And at the same moment Mr. Sam and I both saw it; she was in white, but she had a red rose tucked in her belt!

Mr. Sam muttered something and rushed at her, but he was too late. Just as he got to the door he opened and in came Mr. Pierce, with Mr. Sam's fur coat turned up around his face and Mr. Sam's cap drawn well down on his head. He stood for a moment blinking in the light, and Mrs. Van Alstyne got up nervously. He never saw her, but Mr. Sam—I lighted—our Miss Patty's face and stayed there. Mr. Sam was there, but what he do? Mr. Pierce backed the door to Miss Patty, took her hand, said, "Hello there!" and kissed her. It was awful.

Most women will do anything to save a scene, and that helped us, for she never turned a hair. But when Mr. Sam got him by the arm and led him toward the stairs, she turned so that the old cats sitting around could not see her and her face was scarlet. She went over to the wood fire—the lobby is a sort of big room with chairs and tables and palms, and an open fire in the winter—and sat down. I don't think she knew herself whether she was most astonished or angry.

Mrs. Biggs gave a nasty laugh.

"Your brother got back safe, I see," she said to Mrs. Van Alstyne. "I dare say a sister doesn't count much when a new princess is around!"

Mrs. Van Alstyne was still staring up the staircase, but she came to her self at that. She had some grit in her, if she did look like a French doll.

"My brother and Miss Jennings are very old friends," she remarked quietly. "I believe that was what you thought, too. I don't think she had another red rose, and when she was she to think but that Mr. Pierce had been Miss Jennings somewhere—I'm sure she danced, Mrs. Sam was. But she carried off the situation anyhow, and gave us time to breathe. We needed it.

"If I were his highness," said Miss Cobb, spreading his Irish lace collar, she was making over her knee and squinting at it, "I should with my fiancee to be more—er—dignified. Those old Arabian families are very haughty. They would not understand our American habit of osculation."

I was pretty mad at that, for say body could have seen Miss Patty didn't like him.

"If by osculation you mean kissing, Miss Cobb," I said, going over to her, "I guess you don't remember the American count who was a head waiter here. If there was anything in the way of osculation that that member of an old Arabian family didn't know, I've got to find it out. He could slip all around any American I ever saw!"

I went back to my news stand and was shaking so my knees would hardly hold me. All I could think of was that Mr. Pierce, Miss Patty, Mr. Dick and Carter, and that for a time we were saved, although in the dreary light Mr. Pierce was a good bit less like Dicky Carter than he had seemed to be in the spring-house by the fire.

Well, "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof!"

Everybody went to bed early. Mr. Thorburn came over and bought a cigar on his way upstairs, and he was as polonge as he had been cheerful before.

"Well," I said, "I guess you won't get a dancing floor in the dining-room just yet, Mr. Thorburn."

"I'm not in a hurry," he snapped. "It's only summer people who want to tip the place until May. I'll get it when I'm ready for it, and a good look at young Carter, and he's got long sojourn a jaw to run a successful nouse-hold!"

I went to the pantry shelf at ten o'clock and drew off a glass of water for Mr. Pierce. I found some chicken and some cake, and I made a decent supper—I had kept the key of his wine-cellar since he left—and I was out and down myself, head down, in the spring—"

"I'll be back," I said, as I went to saw it then—but it got a hard cover miles. Then he looked at the door where Miss Patty had gone out and gave himself a shake.

"Well, I'm going. "We'll fight it out on this line if it takes all summer, Minnie dear. After all, what's blue blood to good red blood?"

Which was almost what the bishop had said!

Mr. Moody took indigestion that night—but that he always had it, but that was worse—and Mrs. Moody came to my room about two o'clock and knocked at the door.

"Come here!" she said. "There's no doctor, and he's awful sick!"

We went down to Mr. Moody's room, and he was sitting up in bed with his knees drawn up to his chin and a hot water bottle held to him.

"Now, you go to bed, woman," he said to me when I opened the door. "I'm all right."

"You look sick," I said, going over to the bed. It never does to cross them when they get to the water-bottle stage. "The pharmacy clerk's gone to bed, and you're unlikely, but I guess I can find you some whisky."

"Don't you touch the stuff and you both know it," he snarled. He had a mouth just then and stopped, clutching up the bottle. "Besides," he finished, when it was over, "I haven't got indigestion."

Well, to make a long story short, we got him to agree to some whisky from the pharmacy, with a drop of peppermint in it, if he could wash it down with hot water. He swallowed it and no harm.

I put on some stockings of Mrs. Moody's and a petticoat and a shawl and went down to the village.

It was still snowing, and part of the time Mrs. Moody's stockings were up to their knees. The wind was blowing hard, and when I rounded the corner of the house my lantern went out, and I stood there in the storm, with the shawl flapping, thanking heaven I was a single woman, and nobody ready to go back and tell Mr. Moody what I thought of him when I looked toward the spring-house.

At first I thought it was echo, then

HAVE TO HEAR THE REPORT!

Baseball Pitchers Not Satisfied Unless They Can Note the Impact of the Ball.

Once upon a time there was a pitcher in a certain league who was regarded as a star. And the reason for his success was this:

He warmed up with a certain catcher. It was this catcher's duty to call out the ball in such a manner that a loud report sounded when the ball struck the mitt. The pitcher, hearing these loud reports, would smile and be encouraged to do his prettiest, knowing that the ball he sped. And the ball the catcher tried to gently put over would make a big noise and not produce a noise like a crack of the whip. Needless rifle the pitcher was in.

This may sound like a fable, but it is far from such. There are two varieties of catchers who well remember this trick. One of the old-timers used to catch him in practice and recalls the effect of the loud reports.

The incident is not a fond and burlied part of the past. Parallel cases can be found today, and the custom is growing. And the demand for the loud noise is warming up has caused the coming of the "Fourth of July" ball.

A recruit was warming up the other day. He became wild and looked wild. The catcher tried to gently him and failed.

"What's the matter?" asked the catcher.

"They don't crack," replied the pitcher.

Wait till I haul out the 'Fourth of July' ball!

The catcher, brought out another glove. It has a thick leather covering. The minute the new glove came into the warming up exercise produced a noise like artillery practice. The pitcher got his control, smiled in satisfaction and stayed much speed and plenty of curves.

And why shouldn't this be? Our popular magazine of baseball reports are filled these days with essays on the psychology of baseball. If there is psychology in baseball, surely this comes under that head.

Had No Good Reason.

Upton Sinclair said the other day in New York:

"Everybody is jumping up and saying that poverty, bitter and grinding poverty, has nothing to do with making girls go wrong. Well, for my part, I think that such assertions are charitable toward modern social conditions, for charitable to—well, I don't know what.

"Such charity reminds me of the young lady who asked:

"'Pa, dearly Tottle Footlite marry the septuagenarian Gobaa Golde for love or money?'

"'Pa' both,' the young lady answered confidently, and I'm sure she wouldn't have any money, you know.'"

I saw that the light was coming from the window. Somebody was inside, with a big fire and all the lights going.

I went over cautiously to one of the windows, wading in deep snow to get there—and if you have ever done that in a pair of bedroom slippers you can realize the state of my mind—and looked in.

There were three cleaire drawn up in a row in front of the fire, with my mountain boarding on them to make a couch, and my grandmother's plaid shawl folded at one end for a pillow. And stretched on that with her long sealskin coat laid over her was Dorothy Jennings, Miss Patty's younger sister! She was since, as far as I could see, and she was leaning on one elbow with her cheek in her hand, staring at the fire. Just then the door into the pantry opened and out came Mr. Dick himself.

"Here's a calling, honey?" he said; coming over and looking down at her. "You were such a long time!" says

He Looked Down at Me.

she, glancing up under her lashes at him. "I thought you'd gone."

"Bless you," says Mr. Dick, stooping over her. "What did I ever do with-out you?"

I could have told her a few things he had, but by that time it was no using over me pretty strong that here was the girl for Mr. Dick after and that I had an extra one on my hands. A minute I looked at this one I knew how nobody but a blind man would mistake one for the other, and Mr. Dick wasn't blind. I tell you I stood out in that coon-bank and perspired!

Well, it was no place for me unless they knew I was around. I waited around on the front of the house till there was a grand upsetting of the bedroom slippers and my shepherd's plaid shawl. Mr. Dick jumped to his feet and Miss Patty sat bolt upright and stared at me over the backs of the chairs.

"Minnie!" cried Mr. Dick. "An I'm a married man, it's Minnie herself! Dorothy, don't you remember Minnie?"

She came toward me with her hand out. "I'm very glad to see you again," she said. "Of course I remember—why you are hardly dressed at all! Your hair is wonderful."

I went over to the fire and emptied the bedroom slippers and the chairs. Then I sat down and looked at them both.

"Present!" repeated it; "I'm in a hot sweat. If you two children must go on, why in creation didn't you come to the house?"

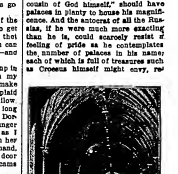
"We did," replied Mr. Dick, prompt-ly. "We crawled under the wire fence into the deer park at five minutes to twelve. Then we sat down on the ground, and I was—and I was not going

CZAR IS VERY RICH

Russian Sovereign Has Many Palaces to House Treasures.

In Fact, So Numerous Are They That the Czar Is a Stranger to Many of Them—Nicholas Has Very Simple Taste.

London.—It is only fitting that a sovereign who rules a territory 70 times as large as the British Isles, whose annual revenue is counted in millions, and whose splendor and power are so great that in the simple minds of his simple subjects he is "a cousin of God himself," should have palaces in plenty to house his magnificence. And the satorest of all the Russias, if he were much more exacting than he is, could scarcely resist a feeling of pride as he contemplates the number of palaces in his name; each of which is full of treasures such as Croesus himself might envy, re-



In One of the Czar's Palaces.

marks the London Weekly Telegraph

So many are his stately pleasure houses that there are less drawn to him than to the stranger who is permitted to explore them with eyes of wonder. There are, it is said, hundreds of rooms into which his august feet have never entered, and there are countless treasures of art which he has not recognise as his own.

Nor can we wonder at this should be so when we consider that in and around St. Petersburg alone there are a dozen imperial houses, one of which is large enough to give luxurious lodging to many thousands of guests; and that the Kremlin at Moscow is a small city of palaces." In the Crimea, to which we should have to imagine ourselves gone, Livadia, Alupka palace and the Tower of London inclosed with the same wall.

The Winter palace, which stretches its long imposing front on the bank of the Neva at St. Petersburg, is splendid and supported by massive columns and crowned through all its length by beautiful statuary, has alone more than ample accommodation for every branch of the imperial family that is number and dowered with estates that fill the largest map, scattered, with their armies of servants and attendants, and the suites of each. That vast pile is even more impressive than its dimensions.

The chief glory of Peterhof, a few miles from St. Petersburg, are the glorious fountains, which, if anything, surpival, if they do not eclipses, those at Versailles. The palace of Tsarskoe Selo stands the Alexander Schloss, a smaller palace, but crowded from basement to ceiling with the richest treasures of the world, and the Chinese palace, filled from all the corners of the earth, with everything that is the greatest artists of Russia, and a magnificent collection of models, chiefly military. This palace has also the cradling of more than one of the Russian imperial children.

When Nicholas wishes to escape from the cares of state and of pomp and ceremonial, he finds an ideal home in his castle at Spala, in Russian Poland, or at his villa at Livadia, in the Crimea, country home among the Crimean vineyards, to which emperor and empress have spent many of their happiest hours together, removing the days of their honeymoon. England has no more peaceful scenery of the Thames. Here, surrounded by the Crimean hills and backwaters, the future ruler of a hundred and seventy millions humbly pressed his suit. He was there also contented in this rustic retreat that he rejected all offers to smoke him.

WOMAN IS CURED AT LOURDES

After Communion Before Grotto and Throws Crutches Away—Causes Wonder.

Paris—Another cure is reported from Lourdes.

Madeline Lopiac, thirty-five years old, of Toulouse, who was suffering from paralysis, recovered suddenly after communion before the grotto. She regained the use of her left leg, which had been useless for some time, and throwing away her crutches, walked in front of the assembled pilgrims.

The enthusiasm which followed the cure was tremendous.

Not Responsible for Husband's Debts.

Union Hill, N. J.—Mrs. Albert Sperberow of the city advertised in a local paper that she would not be responsible for debts contracted by her husband. She explained that her husband will not support her and that she advertised because she did not want him to borrow money in her name.

THANKSGIVING DAYS PAST and PRESENT

THANKSGIVING DAY has a long and curious history and did not originate entirely with the Pilgrims at Plymouth, for their holy days are mentioned in the Bible—days set apart for giving thanks to God for some special mercy. These days of fast and prayer were customary in England before the Reformation, and later the Protestants appointed certain days of prayer and thanks for various blessings. The discovery of the Gunpowder Plot in 1605 to London brought the commone seotlnoot of Thanksgiving. A scheme had been formed to blow up parliament house on the 5th of November, the first day of the session. Great quantities of gunpowder and inflammable matter had been secretly conied to the vaults underneath the building. The plot was discovered and the traitors were executed. Ie coorequeoco of this deliverance the day was ordered to be kept as a public thanksgiving to Almighty God' every year that 'unfeigned thankfulness may never be forgotten, and that an ages to come may find praises to God's divine majesty for the same." All ministers were ordered to say prayers thereon, for which special forms were provided. This annual thanksgiving, together with one established later on May 29, was abolished in 1833 in England for both had fallen into desue. For several years afterwards, however, these days were observed in New England by the Episcopal church on account of its place in their church calendars. England continued to have special days appointed for giving thanks, and as recently as 1872 there was a day selected for the public to offer prayers of thanksgiving for the recovery of the late King Edward the Seventh from typhoid fever.

The first thanksgiving on the American continent was held by an English minister named Wolfall, and was celebrated at the coast of Newfoundland. This pious man accompanied the Frobisher expedition which brought the first England colony to North America. The day of the worship given the record of the day's observeoce and text on Monday, May 28, 1578, aboard the Ayde, the men received communion, and how Minister Wolfall in a sermon gave humble and hearty thanks to God for his miraculous deliverance in these dangerous places. This was the first Christian sermon preached in North American waters. Again in 1607 there was a similar service held at Sagadahoc, a little village on the coast of Maine. There is little record of this thanksgiving except that it consumed only a few hours of the day, after which the people returned to their boats.

The great American Thanksgiving day had its origin in the Massachusetts colony in 1621, and Gov. William Bradford, the first governor of that little band of sturdy pilgrims, sent out the first Thanksgiving proclamation, calling apart a day for prayer and rejoicing over the bountiful harvest of that year. The Englishmen recalled their Guy Fawkes thanksgiving, and the Dutch remembered hearing their ancestors speak of the great day of praise and prayer held at Leyden, Holland. In 1676, when that city was delivered from a siege. So, the entire colony began their pious preparation for the event. They vowed to be the Thanksgiving the colooy ever knew, for after the first one, which lasted several days, the Puritan Thanksgiving meant long sermons, long prayers and long faces. Governor Bradford determined that the initial Thanksgiving should be celebrated with as little ceremony and that feasting should play a part in the occasion. History tells us that he sent out four men, who were to search for game for the feast. Many fowls were shot—in fact, enough to meet the wants of the colony for a week. Wild turkeys predominated, as it seems that the turkey made its appearance early in the history of Thanksgiving. The day selected was December 13 (old style). At the dawn of that day a small cannon was fired from the hill and a procession was formed near the beach, close to where the Plymouth Rock now rests. They marched, carrying his ministerial garb and carrying the Bible, led the procession as it moved solemnly along the street. The men walked three abreast, and Governor Bradford in the rear. There was a long service in the meeting house, and after it was over there was a dinner—and such a dinner had never been known in the colony. Apart from the savory turkey and other wild fowl, the women had done their share in providing good things from the limited supply of their command. The most dramatic incident occurred when the dinner was in progress, for as if by magic 90 friendly red men, under King Massasoit, appeared, carrying bunches of game as an addition to the feast. Thanksgiving day soon lengthened into days, for the psalmsinging and feasting, interspersed with war dances, were continued several days.

After that Thanksgiving days came on a different aspect, and occurred at any season; sometimes twice a year, or sometimes a year or two were skipped, just as it pleased the governor of the colony, until 1684, when the day became a formal one in Massachusetts. Other colonies followed the example, and pretty soon all New England joined in giving thanks on the same day.

During the Revolutionary war Thanksgiving days became a fashion, and the continental congress set apart at least eight days during one year for that purpose. On December 11, 1777, General Washington issued a proclamation for a general Thanksgiving to be celebrated by the soldiers of the Continental army. In 1789 congress decided to ask the president to issue a proclamation asking the people to respect work and give thanks on a certain day of the year. There had been considerable opposition to the passage of the bill, some of the reasons given being more humorous than serious. President Washington acquiesced in the wishes of congress and issued a proclamation appointing November 26 of that year as the day for the American people to join in thanksgiving to God for the care and protection he had given them in their plentiful harvest and freedom from epidemics.

From that time on our presidents issued proclamations, but it was generally left to the governors of the states to determine on what day it should occur. Under the administration of John Adams two national fast days were observed, but no real Thanksgiving. It was not until 1815, after three national fasts on account of the war, that another national Thanksgiving was appointed by the president, James Madison. This was due to peace with Great Britain. After this there was another lull in Thanksgiving, as far as presidents were concerned until 1849, when President Taylor set a day of fast on August the third on account of the cholera. Meanwhile the national Thanksgiving day seemed to be dying out, except in the New England states. Then came the Civil war, and the nation was again summoned to fasting, and two such days were kept in 1861—January 4 and September 25—but it was not until 1863 that the horizon had so brightened as to warrant the appointment of a national Thanksgiving. Immediately after the Battle of Gettysburg Mrs. Sarah J. Hale, a Boston woman, wrote to President Lincoln suggesting a national thanksgiving, and following her advice the president set apart Thursday, August 6, as a day of "prayer and prayer." On November 26 of the same year another Thanksgiving was kept, and this was really a great festival and observed in every northern state. In 1864 the 24th of November was kept. After this, with one exception, our great national day of thanks has been celebrated on the last Thursday in November.

The presidential proclamations contain very little that is new or original and usually take the form of an easay. In 1898, after the Spanish-American war, President McKinley had a chance to vary the conventional form by "giving special thanks for the restoration of peace." This was still 100 years after Washington's proclamation. President Roosevelt, who always did original things, declared "that a Thanksgiving proclamation could not be made a brilliant epigrammatical paper." The proclamation of the president stamps the feast with a sort of official character —something possessed by no other holiday. This proclamation does not make it a legal holiday—it merely recommends that the people suspend their business for a special season in order that state is required to make the day a legal holiday, and this has not been enacted in every state.

The day was originally set apart for thanksgiving, fasting, prayer and religious devotions, but the modern Thanksgiving has become a day of feasting and family joy, and is made the occasion of all sorts of sports and festivities. The cross for outdoor life keeps away from the churches, although the places of worship continue to be filled with "a goodly company," who gather to give thanks to him from whom comeih every good and every perfect gift."

The chief feature of the Thanksgiving feast and as an addition the good things of the field and vineyard have been added. The famous pigeon pie, which was a popular Thanksgiving dish in the early part of the nineteenth century, is rarely seen in these days, but the mince pie, which slighted in great numbers on the bonk shelves, is often enticed by a door dock with in a spring net and caught by the hundred. They were kept alive and fattened on grain until the day before Thanksgiving, when they were killed and made into a pie for the Thanksgiving table.

Most of the old customs of the day have passed out of existence. The turkey raffle with dice is still a custom in some parts of the country. Usually the turkey is a wild bird, which was purchased cheap by the proprietor of the saloon (for the raffle usually takes place there). The raffle, of course, draws a crowd of men, who incidentally patronize the bar during the proceedings. Another favorite feature of Thanksgiving no longer in vogue was the shooting match, where live turkeys tied to stobs were used. This cruel practice was abandoned because the New England clergy objected, not on account of its cruelty, but because it kept the men away from the church service. This reason seems to fit in with the idea of the mode back in the seventeenth century who, while they were eating a Thanksgiving dinner of venison, discovered that the deer had been killed on Sunday. They at once sent for the Indian and had him publicly whipped, and also compelled him to return the money which he had been paid for the deer. This feeling done, they at once resumed their dinner and finished up the venison.

New York city is responsible for the strangest of all Thanksgiving customs, and one which has only recently died out. Young men and boys used to dress themselves in fantastic garb and parade the streets—hundreds of the boys wearing their sisters' old clothes, their faces smeared with paint and their heads covered with wigs. As late as 1895 they held parades and made the street hideous with their thumping drums and blaring trumpets. In 1870 this queer performance took on the dignity of a political parade and prizes were distributed to the companies wearing the most unique clothing. Senator William M. Tweed, the famous political boss of that period, was the donor of a prize of $100 to part. This custom was undoubtedly a survival of Guy Fawkes days, carried out on a later day in the year; for some unknown reason it was practiced only in New York city.

Thanksgiving has always been a day of charity, and in the old days it was considered bad luck to turn even a tramp from the door, and today our friendly inns, almshouses and charitable institutions have their turkey dinners, usually at the expense of the inmates. The prisons, too, serve their inmates with a hearty meal and have some sort of service or parade. The customs of the great national holiday may have changed somewhat, yet the spirit of the first Thanksgiving, which was held at Plymouth in 1621, still hovers about the national day of prayer and praise of the twentieth century—a spirit of thankfulness to God for his mercy and kindness to the people of our great American republic.

FOR ARRIVING COOKS.

"How will I find the house?" asked the cook, who had booked for Lenoxville.

"Can't go wrong," said her employer. "Our church maintains a reception committee at the depot."

RUINS MANY CENTURIES OLD!

Invaluable Archeological Find Has Just Been Reported From New Mexico.

Forgotten cities of a prehistoric people, far beyond what was deemed the furthest eastern limit of the town building Indians, were reported by Father Julius Hartman of the Catholic parish at Willard, Torrance county, New Mexico, to the school of American Archeology at Santa Fe.

Father Hartman was compelled to give up his explorations by the severe winter until next spring, but made a survey of sixty miles of ruins and rock inscriptions extending from the present Mexican village of Pinos-wells, Torrance county, to the Canyon Pintada, in a region that is desolate and uninhabited and touched only at long intervals by sheep herders.

The ruins of the villages and communal dwellings antedate the Spanish conquest of 300 or more years ago, and judging from the debris that covers the sites and hides the ruins, the cities are 1,000 or more years old. The two villages nearest to Pinoswells are located on a high mound and the communal buildings are circular in form.

From the burial place Father Hartman took skeletons, funeral urns, pottery, stone implements and weapons and other relics characteristic of the prehistoric town builders of the Rio Grand valley.

The pictures of the granite walls, however, are apparently more enduring, as they are still in a fine state of preservation and show figures of animals, birds and human beings, as well as symbolic figures, which are interpreted with perfect accuracy by the Indians of Isleta, Torrance county, to the Canyon Pintada. BROOKS, TERREBONNE, ETC.

Alf Berry, the popular Brooks rural mail carrier, apparently without any effort to hasten the event (old father time having been kept at bay by a firm hand) attained his majority on Sunday, Nov. 23, this being his 21st birthday. He and his sister Miss Bea, planning a reception and birthday party for the occasion. A whole houseful of his friends from Badger to Lambert's boys and girls, married folks and bachelors, assembled at the Berry homestead on Saturday evening to make merry and do justice to the sumptuous turkey supper served at six o'clock. The evening was whiled away with games and many vocal and instrumental numbers. George Pearcent contributed most to the entertainment by his excellent violin and cornet solos, Miss Helen Herr being the accompanist. Alf himself led in the quartet and all the latest songs. Cigars and pure apple cider were passed around and the jovial spirit taste still lingers. Some of the parties attending were Harvey H. St. Yves, Ike St. Hilaire, Peter St. Regual, Della Pelgren, Josie Bonnie, Mr. and Mrs. Lauzel, Mr. and Mrs. F. Dermanan, Mr. and Mrs. P. RED LAKE FALLS GAZETTE.

RED LAKE FALLS GAZETTE—ESTABLISHED 1913

RED LAKE FALLS, RED LAKE COUNTY, MINNESOTA, THURSDAY, DECEMBER 4, 1913. VOL. XXXI—No. 10.

FOUND DEAD MAN IN CELLAR

DEAD A MONTH—MAN HAD BEEN DRINKING HEAVILY.

On Tuesday of this week county officials received a telephone message from Plummer advising them that the body of a man had been found in the cellar of an otherwise vacant house on section eleven, Gervais township.

County Attorney Boughton, Coroner Belair and Sheriff Fellman went to the place and took the testimony of enough witnesses to satisfy them as to how the man came to his death. It was learned that previous to his disappearance, about a month ago, he had been drinking very heavily and it is presumed that in a rather irresponsible condition he went to the house and there died as a result of his excessive indulgence and exposure. The house was locked and the position of the body indicated that the intoxicated man had crawled into the cellar, where the body was found, through a hole in the sill. Two empty whiskey bottles were found near the body. Witnesses had seen the man, much intoxicated, on the road near the house and probably on the day he entered the cellar.

The man's name was Ole Canning and he was about fifty years old. He had been in the country two or three years. Let whether he worked with Peter Johnson and during the past season was employed by Magnus Olson. It is said that he has two sisters, one in Minneapolis and one in California, but the authorities have not learned the address of either. The body was buried at the expense of the county.

DEATH OF PIONEER.

Bruno Gerosler of Terrebonne Passes Away Friday.

Bruno Derosier, one of the pioneers of Red Lake county, passed away at his home in Terrebonne township last Friday. Mr. Derosier was seventy-six years of age and had been in failing health during the past few months. Mr Derosier was born in Canada. He came to this county thirty-two years ago and had resided here ever since. Mr. Derosier was known to hundreds of Red Lake county people and many friends were pained to learn of his death.

Mr. Derosier is survived by his widow and eight children, two daughters and six sons. The daughters are Mrs. Arthur Benoist and Miss Mary Derosier. The sons are Fremont, Vital Daniel, Arthur, Dolphis and Joseph.

The funeral was held at St. Anthony's church, Terrebonne, of which deceased was a member, at 10 o'clock Saturday morning, Rev. Fr. LeFloch officiating.

BIG GAME SEASON CLOSED.

Sunday Last Day—Not Many Deer Killed Locally.

Sunday, Nov. 30, was the last day of the big game season and all deer not killed before that date are safe except from attack by "sportsmen" who are willing to take a chance with the law.

Not so many deer were killed in the vicinity of Red Lake Falls as usual, due to the fact no doubt that with the snow on the ground it was difficult to track the deer.

Stockholders' Meeting.

The annual meeting of the stockholders of the First State Bank of Red Lake Falls, Minn., for the election of directors will be held in the banking house on the 12th day of Jan. 1914, between the hours of ten A. M. and four P. M.

Dated at Red Lake Falls, Minn., Dec. 4, 1913.

NOEL DELORME, Cashier.

RINGDAHL WILL SUCCEED TOUPIN

MAN WHO HEADED STATE TICKET TO GET CROOKSTON BERTH.

Crookston, Nov. 21.—All speculation has been set at rest regarding the successor of A. P. Toupin, register of the U. S. Land Office at Crookston, by the announcement of the recommendation of P. M. Hine that the position by Martin O'Brien, chairman of the Democratic State Committee who forwarded his name to Level D. Lynch, national committeeman, who in turn has forwarded it to President Wilson whose appointment will soon go up before the United States Senate for confirmation.

While it is generally conceded that Mr. Ringdahl, as a reward for heading the Democratic state ticket in the last election, and who is now one of several, plums it was not known that he had definitely made his choice.

This leaves the receivership still to be opportioned, and there are at least half a dozen candidates for the job. There has been no intimation from the powers that be as to who will be the favored man. The term of Register Toupin ends the latter part of December, while the term of Receiver Peterson will not end till about February 5th.

ANNUAL MEETING FAIR ASSOCIATION

DIRECTORS ELECTED—FINANCES OF ASSOCIATION IN GOOD CONDITION.

The annual meeting of the Red Lake County Agricultural society held at the Riverside Club rooms Tuesday afternoon was rather well attended by the stockholders of the society.

The terms of office of three members of the board of directors expired and their successors were elected for terms of three years. Those whose terms expired are Blakey Farrell, Ed. Enright and C. O. Kankel, Jr. Fisher, who was elected last year, having removed from the county, tendered his resignation and it was necessary to elect his successor for the remaining two years of the term.

C. O. Kankel was elected to succeed W. H. Fisher and will serve two years. The new members on the board elected for terms of three years are S. M. Strand of Brooks, Jos. Salby and T. A. Nelson.

The new officers who with the members of the board of directors will have charge of the 1914 fair will be elected at a meeting of the board of directors to be held a little later.

Though the reports of the secretary and treasurer read at the annual meeting of the society at the 1913 fair was not a profit-maker, it does indicate that the finances of the society are in good condition. The fair grounds have been nicely improved, with good buildings, fences race track etc. The value of this property is placed at $9,000 and against it there is an indebtedness of $2860 drawing a low rate of interest.

Death of Mrs. McAnulty.

Mrs. McAnulty, long a resident of Red Lake Falls, passed away at her home in this city Friday morning, Nov. 28. Death was due to the infirmities of age, Mrs. McAnulty having been in failing health for the past few weeks.

The funeral was held at St. Mary's church Monday morning at 10 o'clock. Mr. McAnulty and Mrs. Katherine McAnulty took the body of their mother to Parkhurst, the home, for burial.

Mrs. McAnulty is survived by two daughters, Mrs. Carroll and Miss Kate Cronin, Henry Lee William and Charles of this city and one son residing in Iowa. The Gazette does not have at this time data for an extended obituary.

FEDERALS UNABLE TO REGAIN JUAREZ

GENERAL VILLA STILL VICTORIOUS, AFTER LONG BATTLE NEAR U. S. BOUNDARY.

LIST OF FATALITIES LARGE

Ft. Bliss U. S. Troops Rush to Defense of Texas City—10,000 Reported in Engagement and Many Are Dead.

El Paso, Texas, Nov. 26.—Repulsing a front, right and left flank attack, turning the separate attacks into a general engagement, along his 12-mile line of defense, General Francisco Villa, by executing a clever strategy drove the attacking federal forces out of their camp before Tierra Blanca and hurled his cavalry after them as they fled in a panic to their trains.

Shower of Bullets.

Showers of bullets, with frequent crashings of cannon balls, have been falling in the vicinity of El Paso since Monday morning, and the fighting between Mexican federals and rebels gives no sign of letting up until one side or the other is master in the district across the Rio Grande, frooting Texas for 100 miles.

A train bearing eight dead and 17 wounded rebels reached Juarez. The train went back to the front after more of the dead and wounded. Robert Dorman, an American photographer, who was with Villa when the battle started reported on the train.

Girls Watch Battle.

Long distance telephone girls on duty on the American side opposite the battle field reported that hundreds of men were soon to fall as the fighting armies struggled across the river from the Texas side most of the day. The frontal attack on the Constitutionalists under General Villa began about 25 miles south of Juarez, according to an American chauffeur from Tierra Blanca. The artillery on both sides was engaged.

A report that the federals were attempting a flank movement from the west reached Juarez about the hour the frontal attack was commenced.

U. S. Troops in Action.

On the American side of the Rio Grande all troops at Fort Bliss were ready for immediate action and Troop C, thirteenth cavalry, and the machine gun platoon were ordered to El Paso to reinforce the United States border patrol.

Auxiliary hospitals have been fitted up in Juarez, a large quantity of medical stores being exported from here.

PASSENGERS GIVEN A THRILL

Six in Saloon When Engine Falls—Dirigible Is Landed With Difficulty.

Pasadena, Cal., Nov. 26.—Five passengers carried by Roy Knabenshue on a dirigible balloon trip of 20 miles to Los Angeles and return, were given a thrill just before reaching here.

At a height of 1,400 feet above the landing place, the engine suddenly stopped when a waterpipe burst. As the craft started to rise, Knabenshue, the sixth occupant, climbed along the dirigible's keel framework to the bow where his weight pointed the balloon toward earth again.

There soon danger appeared in the shape of an orange grove toward which the dirigible was headed. The passengers began throwing ballast bags overboard, and the balloon cleared the trees. Spectators caught an anchor rope and towed the dirigible to its drome. The unusable journey to Los Angeles was made in 20 minutes.

U. S. ARMY AVIATORS KILLED

Two Fall Eighty Feet to Death—Lieutenants Kelly and Ellington Are Victims of Accident.

San Diego, Cal., Nov. 26.—Lieutenants Hugh M. Kelly and Eric S. Ellington, U. S. A., attached to the camp of the 2nd. Aero corps, were instantly killed at North Island when they fell eighty feet in a dual control biplane.

Within eight minutes after Lieutenant Ellington had waved his hand as a signal to the mechanicians to let go the biplane, the army aviator and his brother officer were lying crushed and mangled corpses, a mile away from the hangars whence the two had succeeded.

Lieutenant Ellington, a skillful pilot, occupied the instructor's seat in the biplane, with Lieutenant Kelly at his side. The latter, a comparative novice at flying, was receiving instructions in the mysteries of the control levers.

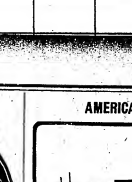
St. Louis Cass Decision Oct. 6.

Washington, Nov. 25.—Government pleas for the dissolution of the Terminal association of St. Louis, held by the supreme court to be in violation of the anti-trust act, were discussed by Attorney General McReynolds and C. E. Crew, of St. Louis. The government's suggestions for a decree will be laid before the United States district court at St. Louis Dec. 6. If that court does not agree with the department's idea of a dissolution plan an appeal will be taken.

Priests Save Sacred Vessel.

New York, Nov. 25.—While 600 faithful knelt in the somber-arched street praying for safety, five priests, one of whom had just risen from a shocked, bruised mass and smoke to rescue the sacred vessels locked in the tabernacle to St. Mary's Star of the Sea Catholic church. A great amount of joy went up as the quintet —their cassocks and faces charred by the heat and flames—struggled out of the burning building with the sacred symbols safe.

GENERAL BLANQUET



If Provisional President Huerta could have his way, he might turn over the reins of government in Mexico to General Blanquet, though there have been rumors recently that the two men are not so friendly as formerly.

NEGLIGENCE AT DES MOINES

CITY NOW ORY AS A RESULT OF GIRL'S CARELESSNESS.

Took Affidavits of Saloon Petitioners When Not Notary—Supposed She Had Her Commission.

Des Moines, Ia., Nov. 25.—The failure of Miss Jessie Cohen, a stenographer, to ascertain definitely whether her notarial commission had been renewed, was the direct cause of the saloons of Des Moines being closed under the supreme court decision, according to developments.

The court declared that Miss Cohen, who took the affidavits of nearly 2,000 signers of the saloon consent petition in 1910, was without authority to act as notary.

It appears that Miss Cohen had applied for a renewal of her commission, but had neglected to file the indorsement with the clerk of the court required by law. About the time she was taking the saloon petitions she was returned by the governor's office, but, thinking it was her commission, she did not take the trouble to open the envelope.

The nearly 2,000 names thus eliminated from the consent petition, which the court declared void, left a majority on the last city election. Instead of the general election, caused it to be insufficient and the saloons were closed.

SENDS SON TO SERVE TERM

Nebraska Youth Forges Checks in Oregon, Is Paroled, But Repeats Crime Later On.

Portland, Ore., Nov. 26.—Edwin T. Ayers, a banker of Dakota City, Iowa, is sending his son, Edwin Ayers, to Oregon to serve five years in the penitentiary, according to a telegram received by District Attorney Evans. Young Ayers came here three months ago and proceeded to pass forged checks on several mercantile houses. He was arrested and pleaded guilty.

His father came to Portland and pleaded before Circuit Judge Kavanaugh to be allowed to take the boy home. The court consented, but young Ayers was sentenced to five years' imprisonment and paroled. A few days ago Judge Kavanaugh was notified by the father that the son had forged checks on several Minneapolis men. That set to send him on a long cruise. This time he refused and the youth has gone to Oregon in custody.

Eva Tanguay Marries John Ford.

Ann Arbor, Mich., Nov. 26.—Eva Tanguay, vaudeville actress, and Johnnie Ford, member of her company, were married here by a justice of the peace. This is Miss Tanguay's first matrimonial venture. Ford was formerly one of the "Five Floor Fords" and until a year ago was leading man in Miss Tanguay's company. He played the part of the American girl with Gordon Bell in the "Enchantress," last season.

Thaw Must Stand Exposure.

Concord, N. H., Nov. 25.—Harry K. Thaw's appeal in New Hampshire while he is fighting the attempts of New York state to obtain his return to Mattewan insane asylum, will be set at his own expense. That was the order rendered by Judge Aldrich in the Federal court records of the case in which Thaw appears as petitioner for a writ of habeas corpus.

Would Domesticate Heron.

Paris, Nov. 25.—The Academy of Science has decided to offer a prize of $5,000 to the person who devises a means for domesticating the heron in order to obtain algerettes without killing the birds.

Well Known Actor Dies.

Cleveland, O., Nov. 25.—E. M. Holland, 55, one of the best known actors on the American stage, died here of heart disease. He was stricken at his room in a hotel and was found by the housekeeper at noon today.

Minnesota Off Rasf; Safe.

Yokohama, Nov. 26.—The steamship Minnesota from Manila for Seattle, which went aground Sunday on the Oiraits of Shimonosaki, has been refloated. Apparently the vessel has not been damaged.

Lads Are Laid to Romance.

Minneapolis—A slip of paper bearing a girl's name and tucked into a bundle of laundry caused T. J. Marr, who lives at the West hotel, to set out last night on a journey of more than 1,000 miles, just to get a look at the girl. And not without a becoming hesitation and a suspicious plainness about the ears, Mr. Marr admitted that he might—and might have married before he came back home. It all began some three years ago. Miss Pearl Andrews, 2 South Clinton street, Poughkeepsie, N. Y., is the girl in the case.

AMERICAN TROOPS ARRIVING AT MEXICAN BORDER

Owing to the critical state of the relations between our government and General Huerta, many additional American troops have been hurried to the towns along the Mexican border. The photograph shows the arrival of one regiment.

TESTIMONY IN GOVERNMENT SUIT SHOWS MOTIVES.

Cheaper Service Said to Have Been Secondary to Greater Economy of Management.

Chicago, Nov. 24.—Further information on the activities in 1912 of the American Telephone and Telegraph company to absorb 30,000 independent concerns was given by R. G. Hobbell, of Buffalo, government witness in a hearing in connection with the prosecution of the American company for violation of the Sherman anti-trust law.

In the cross examination of Mr. Hubbell, who is president of the Federal Telephone and Telegraph company, counsel sought to show that the proposed consolidation was for the purpose of saving money and would result in lowering the cost of service to the public. Mr. Hubbell thought the motive of the American company was to eliminate costly competition.

The witness also told of an effort by the American company to obtain control of the Stromberg-Carlson company of Rochester, N. Y., said to be the second largest manufacturer of telephone supplies in the country. Mr. Hubbell said if the negotiations had been successful the Independents expected to pay more for their supplies.

Mr. Hubbell said there was no objection among the Independents when Theodore N. Vail suggested a plan for a division of territory, the plan ultimately to result in consolidation.

"If Mr. Vail had submitted anything unfair or unlawful, or what you would term considered contrary to the interests of the public would you have gone further with the negotiations?"

"I thought he was acting in good faith," Mr. Hubbell replied. "I think he did not present anything dishonest. I felt think what he suggested was useful and beneficial."

Mr. Hubbell said the independents went ahead with the plan because it had many good features and he thought a more fair adjustment of matters for the public might be worked out.

The witness was asked if the plan had not been to effect a saving in operating the telephone system of the nation.

"partly," he said. "But lack of the idea I think there was no particular intention of reducing the telephone rate to the public. There was no discussion of cheapening service to the public. In a word, the whole thing was that competition in some districts was too severe, and he was desirous of eliminating that competition."

Wedding Party Entertained.

Washington, Nov. 24.—The president and Mrs. Wilson entertained at dinner at the White House in honor of their daughter, Miss Jessie Wilson, and Francis B. Sayre, who are to be married Tuesday. It was the first White House function given for their young people.

Senator Stephenson Is Sued.

Washington, Nov. 24. — Senator Isaac Stephenson of Wisconsin has been sued for $450,000 in the district court here by Rodney Sackett, a former executive clerk of the senator, who alleges Stephenson employed him to settle claims arising from his campaign of 1908.

Lilac Buds Bursting in Chicago.

Chicago, Nov. 24.—Balmy weather accompanied by a southwest wind which reached a velocity of 40 miles an hour, continues in the lake region. The thermometer here registered 72, the warmest the weather has ever been at this time of year. Lilac buds are bursting. The highest temperature reported in the central divisions of the weather bureau was at Springfield, Ill., where it was 73. It was 70 at Milwaukee, 60 at Kansas City and 62 at Omaha.

REPUBLICANS WILL BE 1916 OPPONENTS

NATIONAL DEMOCRATIC CHAIRMAN SEES PROGRESSIVE ABSORPTION.

OLD PARTIES WILL SURVIVE

McCombs Calls on President and Again Declares He Does Not Want Office but Will Continue Active.

Washington, Nov. 24.—William F. McCombs, chairman of the Democratic national committee, after a conference with President Wilson, announced that he believed the Republican party would be the chief contender with the Democratic party for the presidency in 1916.

Source of Conviction.

"The recent elections," said Mr. McCombs, "have served to strengthen a conviction I have had since the last national election, that much of the Progressive party would be absorbed either by the Democratic or Republican parties, and that the next national political contest would find the Republican party the principal opponent of the Democracy."

Mr. McCombs and the president discussed the general political situation for more than an hour, but the New York situation, the national chairman said, was not brought up in any way. Before calling on the president, Mr. McCombs conferred with Mr. Dermos of Michigan, chairman of the national campaign committee, regarding plans for more cooperation between the congressional and national committees.

Mr. McCombs reiterated his oft-repeated declaration that he sought no public office and that he would not go the ambassador to France.

"I expect to be as active in politics as will be consistent with my business affairs," he said.

Later, the national chairman talked with Attorney General McReynolds and met other members of the cabinet. He will go to New York but will return to Washington for the White House wedding.

Panama Canal Annual Report.

Washington, Nov. 24.—The annual report of the Panama canal and Panama railroad, compiled by Colonel Goethals, chairman and chief engineer, was made public today. Having been written previous to the blowing up of the Gamboa dike, it contains little of general public interest that was not printed at the time of that event. In closing the colonel says the passage of commercial vessels through the canal is dependent upon the time when proper channels can be dredged through the slides.

Makes Meal of Meal Checks.

Montclair, N. J., Nov. 25.—When Thomas Gleason walked up to the cashier's desk in the Brunner restaurant, on Bloomfield avenue, the young woman in charge of the desk gave him a check and turned to the cash register. He gave a moment's study to the pad out of the drawer on to Cashier Gleason and lapped the top off. The morsel had been in the cash register for some time and had destroyed a large number of checks.

Judge Denounces Pardon System.

Pontiac, Mich., Nov. 22.—Ralph R. Joseman, former cashier of the Joseman State bank of Clarkston, was sentenced to serve from seven to twenty years in state prison. He misappropriated more than $100,000 of the bank's money. The bank is in charge of a receiver. In sentencing Joseman the circuit judge told him not to worry, as no Michigan prison could hold a convicted banker for long and went on to denounce the granting of pardons in the past.

Recipe Book For Miss Wilson.

Washington, Nov. 24.—The book containing "all the good old recipes grandmother used to make," is among the wedding gifts Miss Jessie Wilson will take away to her new home after the White House wedding. It has been compiled from contributions of food experts from 400 women, among them wives of cabinet members, government officials and governors of many states. Some of the famous and secret dishes from Miss Wilson's maternal grandmother's cook book have been included in the volume.

DISCUSS FORTIFYING OF CANAL

RIGHT TO POLICE CONCEDED BY GREAT BRITAIN.

Washington Officials' Comment Called Forth by London Speech on Subject.

Washington, Nov. 25.—In connection with discussion of the Gladstone a few days ago by Charles Stuart Norine in an address in London before the Royal United Service Institution that "Despite the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, the world is now faced by a fortified Panama canal," it is pointed out here by officials, that while the treaty itself does not specifically give the United States the right to fortify the canal, the correspondence which preceded on the subject at the time between the British and American negotiators showed that Great Britain conceded the right.

As originally drawn the treaty contained the definite statement that "No fortifications shall be erected commanding the canal or the waters connected."

This was omitted from the final draft, however, "Purposely but not," Senator Lodge asserted in discussing the matter, "as the omission of the prohibition of fortifications in the second treaty," he added, "was considered a sufficient."

The fact that the United States under the treaty is called on to maintain the neutrality of the canal in time of war as well as in time of peace, and furthermore the specific language of the treaty that "The United States shall be at liberty to maintain such military police along the canal as may be necessary to protect it against lawlessness and disorder," it is claimed here, make the right to fortify clear.

As to large fortifications with modern guns constituting "policing" it is argued that there can be no other proper interpretation. The word "police" could not be done without force, equal to the task of maintaining neutrality against any odds.

Auto Upsets; Man Crushed.

Battle Creek, Ia., Nov. 25.—H. M. Smith, a prominent business man of this city was instantly killed in an automobile accident near here. Besides Mr. Schmidt, his wife and Mrs. J. E. Spotts were in the car at the time of the accident. In making a turn in the road the machine somersaulted. Mr. Smith's body was crushed to a pulp, his wife was picked up unconscious and may die. Mrs. Spotts escaped injury.

Eggs on Boycott List.

New York, Nov. 25.—The heads of the local branches of the Hoosier wives' league have been notified by telegraph that the national executive committee of which Mrs. Julius Heath is chairman, has called a nationwide boycott on eggs, according to an announcement made here. The league claims a membership of 3,000,000 persons all of whom are asked to cooperate in the movement. "The consumers were being exploited," it was asserted.

Crews Saved; Vessels Abandoned.

Boston, Nov. 25.—Steamer A. Paul Snowden and the fishboat Annie Snowden and the fishboat Annie Hutte were blown ashore near here during the storm of last night. Particular interest was aroused by lifesavers, but the vessels probably will be pounded to pieces.

Installment Plan for Bonds.

Chicago, Nov. 22.—The attempt of the city controller to dispose of $1,000,000 in municipal bonds "over the counter" not having met with success, according to an announcement, plan of selling has been adopted. Ten per cent down and the balance in sixty days is the new method of selling. In the past week, during which the bonds have been for sale, only $58,000 worth of bonds have been sold, by the new method of the controller hopes for better success.

Convicts Wife Needs No Divorce.

New York, Nov. 21.—A man serving an indeterminate sentence in prison is civilly dead and his wife may remarry without divorce or annulment proceedings, according to an opinion handed down by Supreme Court Justice Seaman. In so deciding he issued a writ of mandamus directing the marriage license bureau to grant a license to Mrs. Mary Gargan, a school teacher. Her husband, John, was sent to Sing Sing for second degree murder, with a maximum sentence of life.

HIGH COST OF FOOD TO GET ATTENTION

TWO DISTINCT PROBES ARE TO BE CARRIED FORWARD, IT IS SAID.

ONE AIMS AT COLD STORAGE

If Conspiracy to Increase Living Cost Is Found, Criminal Suit Starts —Other Will Be Congressional Inquiry.

Washington, Nov. 26.—Another federal investigation into the high cost of living, promising criminal prosecutions, if Attorney General McReynolds can find an alleged cold storage conspiracy, is now under way, and a congressional investigation of a different phase of the cost of living problem is threatened.

The Various Inquiries.

While special agents of the department of justice are sifting charges that eggs, butter and other foodstuffs are being piled up in cold storage to maintain high prices and even force them higher, the house committee on agriculture is preparing to ask for a congressional investigation into prices of meat.

The proposition for a meat investigation was prompted by an announcement that the newly had bought nearly 300,000 pounds of Argentine fresh beef at 9c a pound lower than the best price of American packers and 126,000 pounds of canned corned beef from the American packers at 6c a pound cheaper than the lowest price in the United States market. The price paid was 11.90c a pound for the fresh beef and 15.37c for the corned product.

Why Investigation Is Asked.

Announcing his intention to ask for a congressional investigation of the meat packers' control, Representative Britten declared he wanted to develop "why it is that the consumer is not the advantage of buying from Australia if the navy could do so.

Representative McKellar of Tennessee has pending in the house a bill to prohibit the interstate transportation of any food products kept in cold storage more than 90 days. He contends its enactment into law would go far toward solving the cold storage question. He says the department of justice took up their work yesterday in 11 of the principal cities. They will report particularly on eggs and dairy products and will attempt to make an estimate of the quantities in cold storage and how long they have been there.

Poor Man's Food Increases.

Statistics systematically gathered by agents of the department of labor and made public here from month to month show that in all the principal industrial centers of the United States the cost of foods needed by the average workingman's family have steadily been soaring for the last 23 years. The increase in the commodities have passed the high price marks of 1907, which were then unprecedented. Sugar, according to these statistics, is the only commodity showing a reduction.

Any congressional investigation will be conducted under the direct management of Justice. Attorney General McReynolds' agents will make their reports direct to Washington and not to Republican "bosses" or "rings" as he pledged to determine. Many of there are any grounds for prosecution.

SYRACUSE MAYOR INDICTED

James McGuire, New York Politician, Charged with Extortion Graft.

New York, Nov. 26.—James K. McGuire, mayor of Syracuse, N. Y., and associated with his brother George E. McGuire, in the business of bonding high school contractors has been indicted on a charge of soliciting a campaign contribution from a corporation.

The indictment was based on testimony given before a grand jury by his brother and by Fillmore Condit, New York state agent of the Union Bond Co. of California, that he had sought a contribution of $5,000 in return for paying the way for the company to get bonding business in Syracuse.

Condit testified that he had refused to make the payment and that he had left Syracuse. The case was presented to the grand jury by Assistant District Attorney Garvan.

NEW ALABAMA SENATOR

Frank P. Glass, who was appointed by Governor O'Neal of Alabama to fill the vacant seat in the United States senate resulting from the death of Joseph H. Johnston, editor of the Birmingham News and head of the Montgomery Advertiser.

OWEN ATTACKS U.S. CURRENCY

BANK RESERVE IN WORLD'S GAMBLING MARTS, HE SAYS.

Chairman of Administration Measure Criticizes Present Cash System— New Bill as Remedy.

Washington, Nov. 25.—Under the present system the bank reserves of the country are concentrated largely in New York where they are loaned in speculative accounts on the New York stock exchange, Senator Owen asserted in the debate on the currency bill in the senate. He said the administration bill as reported by the Democrats of the banking committee would remedy this condition.

Senator Owen opposed that the creation of a market for discounted commercial paper and by mobilizing the reserves in public utility regional banks the measure would remove the great dangers of the present financial system.

Declaring that at present New York bankers by the use of a large percentage of the country's reserves are forced to loans reserves of banks and invest in the stock exchange, the senator said: "We are advised, by representative New York bankers that the great banks there would be glad to have the system improved by the establishment of the federal reserve banks strong enough to furnish money on demand against good commercial bills and thus enable the New York banks to withdraw their funds from the stock exchange—which has become the most gigantic gambling establishment in the world—and place such funds in the federal reserve banks to handle legitimate commerce.

"This will be one of the great benefits of the pending measure, that is, it will withdraw from the gambling enterprise on the stock exchanges the reserve of the country and enable those reserves to be used for the commerce of the nation."

In closing Senator Owen explained the security which would be behind the bonds which could be issued against commercial paper.

Crane Revives Old Comedy.

Buffalo, N. Y., Nov. 26.—A quarter of a century in the theatrical world was celebrated by William H. Crane revived his famous old play "The Senator Keeps House." The comedy was first played by Mr. Crane in Detroit on September 26, 1887, and the last performance was given on May 31, 1889.

Big Game Record is Broken.

Duluth, Nov. 28.—With a few days remaining of the big game season the various express offices here report that a record number of deer have been shipped over shipped into Duluth for the season. Local reports show shipments of 1,001 deer, 56 moose and six bears. The shipments are increasing daily and unless the game hunters fire days after the season close for shipping the record will be surpassed by the same period was 88 per cent less than this year.

St. Louis Cass Decision Oct. 6.

Washington, Nov. 26.—Government pleas for the dissolution of the Terminal public service commission by the supreme court to be in violation of the anti-trust act, were discussed by Attorney General McReynolds and C. E. Crew, of St. Louis. The department's suggestions for a decree will be laid before the United States district court at St. Louis Dec. 6. If that court does not agree with the department's idea of a dissolution plan an appeal will be taken.

Milwaukee to Issue $470,000,000 Bonds

Jefferson City, Mo., Nov. 26.—Application has been made to the Missouri public service commission by Charles Mitchell and A. A. Paul railroad for permission to issue $470,000,000 in refunding bonds. The bond issue is to cover all stock issues, betterments and equipment of the 10,000 miles of the Milwaukee system. The bonds are to take up the entire indebtedness of the system. It is thought the commission will grant permission.

Brocades and Furs Dominate Fashion

EVERYWHERE in fashionable apparel, brocades and furs are featured. Whether in coats or gowns or hats, one or the other (and oftener both together), tell of the love of luxurious clothing which seems to be inborn in women. Brocades and furs —in the picture of the street—talk money." They are rich and beautiful beyond all other materials.

In keeping with the richness of superb fabrics, garments are cut on voluminous lines. Cloaks are big enveloping, richly trimmed and draped about the figure. Fur collars and cuffs, gold and silver laces by way of adornment, add to their sumptuousness.

Although many coats, especially those of silk fur, are shorter than the model shown here, many brocaded coats trimmed with fur are very long. This is fortunate for the average woman. It takes a tall figure to wear the shorter coats with any style.

All coats, whether long or short, hang in to the figure at the bottom. If you would be in the class of the ultra fashionable, remember that in all your gowns and cloaks you are to strive for the effect of wrapping your figure with loosely hanging garments. Except about the feet everything is full and roomy. But within this wrapped up figure, cloaks hang easily, away from the neck and loosely about the shoulders. In fact, garments are cut to produce the poss of French women in wearing wraps of furbelow wear such garments as if they were slipping off the shoulder.

Fox, fancy and white furs are favored for collars, cuffs and borders. White fox and furs dyed in fancy shades are smartest for evening wraps. After all, the dark furs make the best combination with rich brocades.

It will not be hard to picture to the mind the wrap shown here, with dark mole-colored ground having deep Nattier blue in the pattern of foliage and flowers which covers it. The combination is quiet but very rich. There is almost no combination more elegant.

Brocades for such coats are wide and they are expensive. One must expect them to cost from ten to twenty dollars a yard. They are more costly than plain velvet, but such triumphs of the weavers' art must bring a price commensurate with their superb beauty.

Muffs and turbans are made of these rich fabrics, and trimmed with fur. They lend elegance to plain costumes by simply requiring a great outlay of money. Pattern hats are draped and are larger than those of fur.

It will be noticed that the material is draped in the scarfs of the coat pictured here and that the shoulder line (or the lack of shoulder line) preserves the vague outline of the figure which delights in

JULIA BOTTOMLEY.

BEST METHODS OF ARRANGING THE COIFFURE

IF you have dark and glossy hair, show the same discriminating taste displayed by the beautiful brunette who is pictured here. Instead of striving for any of the fluffy or any of the severally plain styles in coiffures, select those which bespeak a rich abundance of shining hair.

There is almost no wave in the hair dressed in this fashion. But it is carefully coiled, braided and pinned with many small pins into position. There are four coils overlapping across the back of the head, those at each side being first braided loosely.

The ears are covered except at the lobes, and the hair is brought out only a little way on the cheek. A few short locks are just barely curled at the ends at the side and in fat to the temples.

This coiffure may be managed by any one having fairly thick hair, even if it is short. Brunettes are blessed with hair even in color, and the coils at the back are easily managed with short switches which will match the natural hair exactly. It is not so easy for blonds to find a perfect match, as blond hair is generally somewhat streaked.

In dressing this coiffure nearly all of the hair is combed back to form the coils. Three require four combs, and they are parted off evenly. By waving the hair a little it is easier to make the coils full and light and also the back of the coiffure a better finish also at the crown of the head.

The hair is massed at the back just below the crown and above the nape of the neck. Large shell pins with a few mock jewels, and of excellent quality, are fine with this coiffure.

Black Lace Waists.

As a refreshing change from white waists, the black lace waist, usually of net, is made over flesh color or white lining, which will give equally good service with a newer style. They are just as suited as white waists for wear with a suit of any color. There is a great variety of styles in these waists, some having the foundation of net, chiffon or lace in white, with the black chantilly lace in bolero or jacket arrangement, with the lower section of the sleeves and the front of the waist in white.

Black Waists New.

As a refreshing change from white waists, the black lace waist, usually in chantilly, is made over flesh color or white lining, which will give equally good service with a newer style. They are just as suited as white waists for wear with a suit of any color. Leather Accessories.

Leather and suede are popular for many of the accessories of woman's dress. One is sort of leather peplum to be worn for days of thin silk, for twelve or fourteen inches of the new-est things is the wide big belt of wide. These belts are fastened with big and socket fastenings under little pearl buttons. They are lined with silk in self color.

Nothing in It.

An advertiser calls his patent washing machine "The Ladies' Delight." Now, if there is anything about washing that delights the ladies, we should like to know what it is. They are anything but delighted on a washing day.

State News of General Interest

WANTS EXCITEMENT; FIRES BUILDINGS

MINNESOTAN CONFESSES TO AN EXTRAORDINARY INCENDIARY CAREER.

CONFESSES TO THIRTY FIRES

Mystified State Fire Marshall's Office for Months Until Detective Unraveled Remarkable Affair.

How Arrest Was Made.

Norton's arrest was effected under sensational circumstances. He had deliberately gone to a barn within a block and a half of the central fire station, the police say, poured kerosene on the boards id make them inflammable and was in the act of applying a match when the police and a fire marshal rushed in upon him.

The prisoner's confession, the police say, was a narrative unequaled in any city for daring and lack of real motive.

Implicates Another Man.

Norton's arrest was brought about through the assistance of State Fire Marshal Keller's office. For months the fires occurred and came so frequently that there could be no doubt that a firebug was at work. At first only dilapidated buildings, usually barns and sheds, were attacked, but the man who was applying the torch became more daring following the success of his previous attempts and finally structures in the business district were fired. The state fire marshal's office sent deputies, but their investigation revealed little.

A detective was detailed to Winona to cooperate with the authorities. Norton fell under suspicion and the detective became his constant companion.

Gets Story Gradually.

Gradually Norton revealed his career of crime, he detectives said. Finally, the agent asserts, Norton suggested that they "touch off" a barn and he readily consented. The police and the local fire marshal were "tipped" off and were secreted behind fences when Norton, leading the way, entered the alley, accompanied by his newly made friend. In his hand he carried a quart milk bottle filled with kerosene. He entered the barn while his supposed accomplice waited outside. Norton carefully prepared the building and struck a match, when the bluecoats closed in on him.

A mystery that had baffled the department here for months had been cleared up, the police were positive.

The method by which Norton went at his work when watched was identical with that in almost every one of the other cases.

Norton had, until Saturday night, been employed as a mail wagon driver here. Strangely enough, the authorities recalled when they suspected him, that most of the fires occurred in the vicinity of three depots either directly before or after train time.

ALBERT LEA KNIGHTS HALLY

Collins of Boston Addresses Catholic Society Men in Big Meet.

Albert Lea.—Sunday was a great day for the Knights of Columbus of this city and Austin, as the councils held a joint initiation here. Several currently candidates were initiated, the degree team of Minneapolis doing the work. The services was preached by Rev. Father Dunphy of St. Thomas college, St. Paul. Bishop Heffron of Winona spoke briefly.

In the evening a banquet was served to over five hundred. George Began was toastmaster and Mayor Herman welcomed the Knights. Bishop Heffron, Rev. W. J. Barter of Britt, Iowa, and S. K. Swenson made short remarks. Peter W. Collins of Boston, author and lecturer, gave an address full of fire and enthusiasm. Then J. J. Furlong of Austin, president of the State Agricultural society, made one of his characteristic talks and Thomas J. Bergen of this city, C. I. Riley of Minneapolis, and Nell M. Cronin of Austin followed him.

Warm Weather Not Uncommon.

Moorhead.—Although the temperature ranged about 60 degrees, as the maximum, last week, it has not been a record-breaker for this part of the Red river valley. On Nov. 1, 1857, the maximum was 72 degrees, and again Nov. 2, 1905, the same was reported, and on Nov. 19, 1857, the maximum was 53 degrees. Bricklayers and stone masons here have been working in their shirt sleeves and with bare hands. A feature of the weather was the gorgeous sunsets and the wealth of sunshine.

Moose Lake.—Lawler, a junction of the Soo line west of here, is growing rapidly and its citizens and surrounding farmers have organized a telephone company with Henry Dirr, president and Gust Saari, secretary.

Sentenced to Jail Term.

Winona.—Frank Raff was given 3 months in jail at the opening of United States court here, on the charge of breaking the seals on a Milwaukee freight car in interstate shipment. He is 17.

MORRIS PREPARES FOR CROWD

Corn and Alfalfa Congress Will Draw Great Throng—Much Rivalry Promised.

Morris.—Morris is in a veritable fever of excitement over the coming of the corn and alfalfa exposition to be held here, beginning Dec. 10. The difficulty is going to be to take care of the crowds, but they will be taken care of, that is certain.

The West Central Minnesota Development association some time ago announced a silver loving cup as a prize for the county that would have the largest delegation at the exposition. The counties caught the spirit of the thing, and a great rivalry has developed. Consequently the representatives of the association now have on their hands the duty of providing special trains, and accommodations in private homes.

Every day a special train will be run from Willmar to Morris and back. Every evening also there will be an extra from Morris to Browns Valley, connecting with the Milwaukee train to Ortonville. Then the evening of Dec. 10 there will be a special from the twin cities to Morris. This will arrive in Morris early in the morning, give the twin cities visitors a breakfast of "Twin City day" at the exposition, and get them home in the morning of Dec. 12.

The business men of Morris have raised $3,000 for the expenses of the exposition and the various conventions to be held during the week.

BEE MEN TO SWARM CAMPUS

University Farm Expert Expects Many of 20,000 Beekeepers to Attend.

St. Paul.—Beekeepers of Minnesota are expected to swarm on the campus of the University of Minnesota college of agriculture in spite of the cold weather in January, when a short course in bee culture will be offered under the direction of Rev. Francis Jager, professor of entomology. The department was established at the university in 1905 and has since charged an appropriation made by the legislature. The Minnesota beekeepers' association and the university authorities had urged the need of the school.

With 20,000 beekeepers in Minnesota to draw from Father Jager expects a large attendance at the short course when he large. The work will begin January 29 and will continue for two weeks. Among the topics to be treated are spring, summer and winter management, queen rearing, swarming and bee family; the production of comb and extracted honey; swarming and increase; and practical demonstrations of methods of handling the bees. Several bives of bees will be installed in the farm school greenhouse.

The annual meeting of the Beekeepers' association will be held in Minneapolis December 2 and 3, the work of the department of agriculture and the short course will be explained to the members.

Forty-three Plead Not Guilty.

Minneapolis.—Forty-three pleas of "not guilty" were entered when the three persons arrested Wednesday and Thursday on alleged disorderly houses ordered to appear in court here. Each case was continued. The names charged with keeping these disorderly houses were allowed freedom on bail of $500 bonds each, which were found in the pleces $20. All but three of the former furnished bail and all of the latter.

State Normal Board Holds Conference.

Winona.—The state normal board of the Minnesota district, of all normal schools and particularly Winona, were conducted by State Superintendent Schulz plans to call an annual meeting of the normal board representatives with the Minnesota educational commission to discuss teacher training. The annual meeting of the normal school presidents were entertained at lunch at Morey hall.

Alleged Murderer Not Convicted.

Bemidji.—Judge C. W. Stanton returned to Bemidji after having presided over the fall term of court for Cass county. The jury in the case of John Lloyd, who shot and killed Fred Lilly at Cass Lake, a few months ago, failed to agree and was discharged by the judge. Lloyd's case was continued to Dec. 16, when the case will again be tried.

Warden Arrests Own Son.

St. Paul.—C. V. Smith, game warden at Balsam, Itasca county, made the state game and fish commission that he had arrested his own son. Fred pleaded guilty to charge of using a dog in hunting deer. The son was fined $125.0 by a justice of the peace. Smith is a veterinarian, basis and received no part of the fine.

East Grand Forks After School.

East Grand Forks.—More than fifty farmers of the East Grand Forks district have signed for the university agricultural school, and H. L. Hasting, director of the agricultural department of the university, says that enough sufficient signers will be secured to result in placing one of the schools here. The East Grand Forks high school is affiliated with four rural schools and the farmers have decided lends importance to the local field for a short course.

Prominent Hutchinson Man Killed.

Hutchinson.—Former Sheriff, Commissioner Herman Look was accidentally shot by his son. Will, who was extracting the shells from a magazine gun, did three hours later. He was 48 years old.

Hastings.—The rural letter carriers of Dakota county have perfected an organization, the object being to affiliate with the state and national associations. Officers were elected, Thomas Henry, Farmington, being chosen president.

TO BREED BLOODED CATTLE

Farmers Of Hubbard County Decide to Import Some of the Best Stock Procurable.

Park Rapids.—At a largely attend ed meeting of farmers and business men it was decided to have Professor Riser of the agriculture department of the public schools, purchase a car of blooded cattle for distribution among the farmers of this community. W. M. Taber, president of the First National bank, will finance the transaction to the extent of several cars if the farmers will take an active interest in bettering their herds.

At a meeting of the village council an ordinance was passed compelling milkers of milk to have their cows tested for tuberculosis. A state veterinarian is here, and finds some six or seven cows in the village affected. In tracing these cows it was found they came from two herds.

The C. E. Brodt herd of seventeen full bloods was tested and eight of them condemned. The Reece herd of twenty-seven was found to be in a tubercular state.

Brodt and Reece had requested the expert to examine their cows, and are generally commended for their foresight.

FARIBAULT VICE CRUSADE ON

Fines of $2,200 Collected Against Liquor Dealers and Poolroom Proprietors.

Faribault.—The grand jury investigation of illegal selling of liquor to minors and the alleged sale of liquor to pool rooms resulted in indictments against eleven of the fifteen saloons of the city. All the pool room proprietors were also indicted and there are several indictments against merchants for selling cigarettes.

All but three have originally pleaded not guilty. The next day they appeared again, some one or two, and changed their pleas to guilty. The proprietors of the saloons were each fined from $150 to $200. Fines for the proprietors of the pool rooms ranged from $100 to $200 each. Indictment. The fines for the violations of the cigarette law are $25 for each indictment.

The fines were all paid and amount to about $2,500. The cost of the investigation, which lasted for a hundred high school students were subpoenaed as witnesses.

Meyer Smith has issued notices that all gambling, such as dice throwing, card games, slot machines, etc., must be stopped.

GOV. EBERHART IS SCORED

D. M. Neill, in Address Before G. A. R., Condemns Officials for Pardoning.

Red Wing.—D. M. Neill, in an address here, at the annual camp fire of the G. A. R. encampment, scored Governor Eberhart and President George E. Vincent of the University of Minnesota for traveling about the country, giving public addresses. He declared the people have the right to demand that public servants devote all their time to the duties of their offices.

He referred to Governor Eberhart as the "appointment of an economic commission, and asked what the economic activities was doing to bring about a better system of taxation.

"In the governor studying the needs of the state he is more intent on making trips to conventions and other junketing affairs.

"The president of our university has no right to go about the country during the term, delivering lecturers. He is being paid for being president of the university."

Hartland Man Mysteriously Shot.

Albert Lea.—Nicholl Nelson, a farmer living a mile from Hartland, who had been in this city on business, was found lying beside the road between Albert Lea and Hartland with a bullet hole through his forehead. Beside him was a revolver with four blank cartridges and one loaded shell in the chamber. Physicians entertain no hope of his recovery and say it is a case of murder or suicide has not been determined.

Train Kills Shakopee Physician.

Shakopee.—Dr. Gustave Boldtar stepped from a train in this city and had both legs severed and his face crushed, being killed instantly. The funeral was held under the auspices of Rescue lodge, A. F. & A. M., of which he was a member.

Moorhead Girl Returns Home.

Moorhead.—Miss Violet Nelson, who disappeared a week ago and for whom Minneapolis and Canadian officials had searched, has returned home. The girl is only 16 years old.

EXCELLENT AND PRACTICAL DAIRY NOTES

A Model Cow Shed.

Successful dairy management requires intense interest and intellectual advancement.

Dairy profits do not consist of growing large crops and donating them to unprofitable cows and calling the result profit.

A wire strainer is productive of more harm than good.

Having clean, fresh cloth strainers for each milking will save a lot of trouble and explain the strange phenomena of why the milk soured.

The man who grows legumes to help feed his land has land that yields enough to feed his cows.

Never turn a cow off as unprofitable until you can look her in the eye and say I have done my part in caring for and feeding her.

Many men who leave the city to take up farming lose money while they are learning common sense.

Weighing, testing, and figuring dairy profits is a comparatively easy matter, but the rest is not so easy to accomplish. It is easy to kill a cow or sell her for a low price and get a new in her place. Spt to get a better one requires time, money and rare judgment. The tearing down process is not difficult to find witnesses.

Registration is not certification and it has been proved by actual tests that there is no scrub so poor as a pure bred scrub.

Actual milk yields are of greater importance than fine fancy forms. Size of milk veins and fancy color markings.

No small part of the bacterial dirt in milk comes from the person and clothes of the milker.

Nothing contributes more to the steady thrift of cattle than careful and persistent attention to their every day needs.

Short pasture, a poor water supply, insufficient shade and protection from flies cause more loss and injury to dairy cattle than disease, parasites and preventable injuries.

Good care cannot be administered in bulk. It is the steady every day devotion to the little details that mid to the comfort of the cattle that counts.

No calling in life brings a man in closer contact with the better class of men than breeding high class stock.

It matters not how good a herd may be individually, he cannot head the list of a tuberculin breeder unless he has an acceptable milk record back of his pureness of blood.

It is quite useless to depend upon purchased cows unless he is a better judge of cows than the man he buys of is after testing them, which is rarely not often the case.

The dairy cow need bulk in her ration, but coarse, woody, unleafed substances cannot be profitably consumed.

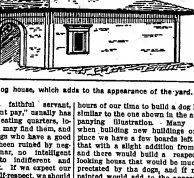
We need only to give the common cow proper care and feed to learn that instead of a profitable animal cow she may be a 250-pound cow. This is the difference in the profit of a cow than the average man is dairying.

The average skim milk calves are unfortunate victims of ignorance and carelessness in feeding and management.

Outside of the fact that a limited amount of fat tends to make the product like a white milk more attractive, it grated the value of the fat may be fully well replaced with cheaper substitutes as soon as the calf's digestive organs have reached a proper development that will enable it to take its nourishment from these foods.

When calves begin to scour the first remedial measures should be to clean

GIVE THE DOG COMFORTABLE QUARTERS



A well-built dog house, which adds to the appearance of the yard.

The dog, man's faithful servant, who works "without pay," usually has to shift for himself in getting quarters, located wherever he may find them, and to doubt many dogs who have a good disposition, have been driven to steal, lest, in this manner, no intelligent dog will respond to indifferent and careless treatment. If we expect our dogs to be companions and friends we should be willing to do the appearance of the place. Build us a dog house, if he is not worth housing, he is not worth keeping.

Protection From Hedge.

A good hedge on the west and south of the paddock and farmstead makes it more comfortable for stock and man. Willow, ash and Norway poplar make good, quick-growing windbreaks. Elm, hackberry, and among evergreen, the spruce, make slow-growing, but long-lived wind breaks.

Save the Feathers.

It is estimated that five chickens will yield a pound of feathers, and Corn Gospel.

The farmer who raises 35 bushels of corn where 20 ought to grow has only half the return for his labor that he ought to. He contributes only half to the community that he owes to that community. has only half as much to expand on the education of his children as he should have.

Market for Skimmilk.

A bunch of good shoats will make the best market for skimmilk this fall and winter.

bours of our time to build a dog house similar to the one shown in the accompanying illustration. Many times when building we have thought, as the piece we have a few boards left over, that we would build a kennel here and there would build a respectable looking house that would be much appreciated by the dogs, and if nastily painted would add to the appearance of the place. Build us a dog house, if he is not worth housing, he is not worth keeping.

THE SWAMP LAND CONTROVERSY

The swamp land controversy brings out some interesting points regarding the state's title to public lands that through their sale and the sale of our rights have brought and will continue to bring immense wealth to the permanent school fund of the state.

The controversy results from a seeming conflict between the terms of the grant by the federal government to the state and constitutional limitations regarding the use to which the proceeds from the lands can be had. The terms of the grant provide that the swamp lands shall be "reclaimed" by the state and the state constitution provides that the proceeds from the public lands shall go to the state's permanent school fund.

Patents to the land are being temporarily held up by the interior department, this action being taken following complaint made to the department by the president and secretary of the Northern Minnesota Development Association, Mr. Ring and Mr. Mickelson. It must not be assumed that these gentlemen have any desire to do anything that may cause the state's title to the land to be seriously questioned. Their purpose is no doubt to bring about a condition that will result in a further "reclamation" of the land by the construction of roads and clearing the lands that will make possible their settlement, which is, of course, desirable.

How this may be accomplished in an interesting question and one that is no doubt receiving the serious consideration of the meeting of the Northern Minnesota Development association at Bemidji this week. Though the state constitution provides that the proceeds from state lands shall go into the permanent school fund and also governs the expenditure of state funds for internal improvements, this has been evaded in the draining of the swamp lands on the plea that the public health demanded the drainage of the swamps. The contemplation of the big ditches is "reclamation" work that has made it possible for the state to make claim to having complied with the provisions of the grant, and, of course, no one is going to contend that the state authorities have violated the small tuition.

Of course, if it should be determined that the drainage is not sufficient "reclamation" work to comply with the condition of the grant, something will have to be done to make good the state's title to the lands, which represent enormous wealth. However, the Gazette is of the opinion that a plan to change the provision of the constitution which requires that the proceeds from the land shall go to the permanent school fund should not be entertained for a moment.

Minnesota has its magnificent school fund not because of the good offices of the patriotic statesmen who have made and administered the laws of the state but because the public money since the time of the federal grant, but because of the constitutional provision creating the fund and making it impossible to divert any of the proceeds of the sale of public lands, and that provision should stand.

If in clearing up the situation it is determined that further "reclamation" work must be done, it certainly is to be hoped that it will not be necessary to change the present order of things more than to make valid the expenditure of a limited amount of the income from public funds for a given period of years to accomplish a specific amount of reclamation work, and every change would probably be undesirable if there could be found other means of meeting the situation. Only absolute necessity should make possible an amendment to the state constitution that would permit freer use of the public funds.

Now that the wedding is over the administration may proceed with other war-like preparations.

If some of those perfectly working political clocks could be made to run the public roads the profit to the public would be greater.

The new tariff bill has caused a reduction in the price of steel. Remember this when you buy Johnson's toy railroad system for Christmas.

John Doe has been "pinched" so many times that he has probably become a hardened criminal, past reform, and it would be better for the law-enforcement people to turn their attention to some other fellows.

It will be well for the peace of the country if there is on end to the practice of American interests going to foreign countries, gaining control of natural products or manufacture and then shouting for protection for their money.

There is no other means by which a publicity message reaches as far as through the use of newspaper space. With newspaper space costing five dollars a merchant can get his story pennimessly for many thousands of people. Spend as much in any other kind of publicity campaign and see if he can get it.

Many of the states that received valuable federal land grants have little to show for Uncle Sam's benefactions, having spent, squandered or otherwise disposed of the proceeds of the land. Not so with Minnesota, thanks to the wisely conceived constitutional provisions creating the public school fund and prohibiting the use of the fund in the making of internal improvements. Every good citizen should desire that the permanent school fund remain undisturbed for the good work for which it was created.

John E. Ring, former publisher of the Gazette, recently put out a "Buck Home" edition of his California paper, the Hemet News, that is as superior that it cannot be described by a comparison with other newspaper efforts. As a production in the country newspaper field it approaches the perfection—artistically, mechanically, in general tone of finances and completeness. It has been rumored that the Hemet News is the best country newspaper west of the mountains. After the "Back Home" edition there will probably be "only imitators."

Nothing could cause a newspaper man more pain than to see some of the country publishers failing for one of the cheapest grafts of the age. Since the postal authorities have barred from the mails publications that contain more than a stipulated per cent of the same of the yallower magazines, so called magazines, that have existed under the "evolution" act for sure-all patent medicine advertisements and after take propositions before the people have besieged country publishers with alluring propositions of "magazine supplements" for sale or rent and a few of the publishers have fallen for the proposition and are giving free circulation for cents to go into any respectable home.

Sauk Center Herald: The Long Prairie Leader says that William H. Lee is the man who put the "fun" in economy as a political issue.

Monticello Times: "Clothe the naked with the ballot," endorse the suffragist speaker. Certainly if that has been their effort the suffragists should be added to the clothing some of them wear.

Brown's Valley Tribune: Since everybody seems to be for it, it is considered here the slogan "Economy and Efficiency" in state government can be made a political issue in the next primary campaign. The issue lies in the test of the sincerity of the candidates for state office and their inclination to do the bidding of the people. It is one thing for a candidate to make promises, and another thing to carry them out after he has been elected. The people should scrutinize closely this phase of the proposition. The man who "makes good" and lives up to the promises his pledges to the voters is deserving of candidate to support for responsible position in the public trust. Look well to the man.

THE STATE AND THE FEDERAL LAND GRANTS.

(Duluth Herald.)

Evidently we are to have a showdown in the matter of the Minnesota swamp land grants.

The interior department has ordered in The Herald Saturday, has suspending the patenting of the remaining half-million acres of "swamp land" pending the investigation of title to the meantime it has formally called on the state for an accounting of its disposition of the swamp lands heretofore patented.

This land was given to the state with the explicit provision that the proceeds of its sale should be used exclusively, so far as necessary, for drainage purposes. What the government now asks is whether the state has complied with the terms of the contract.

That is not, of course, complied with them; and the terms of the state Constitution appear to make it impossible for it to do so. While the lands were granted with the understanding that the proceeds of the sales should be used for reclamation the Constitution requires that the proceeds shall go into the permanent funds, and that those funds shall not be diminished.

The state cannot, therefore, make a satisfactory answer to the demand of the interior department, unless it takes refuge behind the words "as far as necessary" in the land grant act.

But this does not tell the whole story, by any means.

While not a dollar of the proceeds of the sale of government grants has been used for reclamation, by the railway land grants that drainage was essential to public health the state has spent considerable money out of current funds for drainage.

And though even this was greatly neglected for years. In recent years the state probably has drained submerged land about as rapidly as was wise. Drainage of land too far ahead of settlement is likely to prove worse than a waste of money; for the peat soil of drained land not put to use may be destroyed by fire or even blown away by wind.

It is rather unfortunate that the issue as to land heretofore patented has been raised; though it is altogether good that patents are to be temporarily suspended on the part yet unpatented. These patents should be suspended until the state can give an assurance that the proceeds of the sale of the land involved will be used exclusively, so far as necessary for reclamation purposes.

And reclamation, under the terms of the new contract that should be made between the Federal government and the state of Minnesota should mean not only reclaiming wet lands by drainage, but stump-covered lands by clearing and inaccessable lands by road-building. Land covered with stumps and brush is much in need of reclamation by clearing as land covered with water, and land that is unsettled because it is inaccessible is quite as much in need of reclamation by road-building as either.

Nobad, we are sure, wants the Federal government to take the land holder hereinafore patented, an the ground that the state has not complied with the terms of its contract. But it would be to the best interest of the state the bulk of its permanent funds, and many schools from which the leasing of which these funds are getting large revenues will yet get still greater revenues. While the interior department has called on the state to make good the Northern Minnesota Develop ment association, that is a misapprehension. It came from true legislation. Dr. King and Mr. McNeilis, who acted only as individuals, and without any authority whatever from the organization of which they are president and secretary respectively.

There is grave danger that the real point will be missed in this controversy.

Obviously wants the state compelled to forfeit its land grants.

Everybody ought to want the state compelled to live up to its contract therefore.

The important thing to be gained is an understanding, legal and in common understanding, of the terms reclamation that will include not only drainage but land-clearing and road building.

That conception generally understood and crystallized into law, what is necessary next is that the extensive half-million acres shall be patented to the state on the express proviso that the proceeds of their sale shall be expended for and limited to the lands so used, to be used to drain, to clear and to build roads to the state's title to the end that they may be put under cultivation as rapidly as possible.

This program carried out, there would be no need for any particular campaign for settlement. The lands will settle themselves very rapidly, because their soil is rich, because they are close to good markets, because under liberal terms offered by the state they will offer the grandest opportunity anywhere in the world for industrious homeseekers.

The important thing to keep in mind now is the suggestion recently made by The Herald that it is needed be no inconsistency between the provisions of the Constitution and the terms of the state's contract with the government if arrangements can be made to divert the proceeds of the sale of state lands temporarily for the creation of a reclamation fund to be repaid from the profitable development of state lands after the same time greatly enrich the permanent funds of the state.

TROUBLE AMONG THE DEMOCRATS

German "Hull that Mr. Lawler of A. drist would not command. It probably is not generally known, but Mr. Pfaender at one time was state treasurer. He was one of the few who failed to fulfill a political and financial wreck when his term was ended. You can put this down. Pfaender has the Lynch leadership. Mr. Lynch is the Minnesota representative of the Wilson administration, and well the Wilson influence has a heavy faculty foundation. A majority beyond the confines of the national committee. President Wilson is well thought of in Minnesota. If I remember right B. W. Lawler was a Clark backer when the Democratic national fight was on.

Henry Riess of Mora, accepted candidate for state auditor on the Republican ticket, has failed to file for the office as yet, but he says he will in due time. Mr. Riess, with R. C. Dunn, visited the capital last week and have a hunch that he came to register his name. In the conference at the time were Charles Warner of Aitkin and Andrew Davis of Hibbing. The reason Mr. Riess did not file, I understand, is because he is in doubt as to the legal status of the present primary and he does not want to be put in the position of having to make numerous expense filings, which would not be the case if the new primary law was found unconstitutional. The new law makes June the primary month, while September is the month under the old law.

Mr. Riess is not generally taken as land in glove with the Sherburne administration and this fact has been responsible for several inspired articles of late, the burden of which is "beware." It is hardly likely that Mr. Riess is frightened. If he has any sense at all his motto will be "make your own enemies." To start with Mr. Riess knows that the present administration is not responsible to him. He was the head of the house forces, whose every move was anti-administration, and any change of front now would hardly help. I gather from a talk with him that Mr. Riess is going to attend strictly to the affairs of his office and let other fellows fight their own battles.

Asa Wallace, chief deputy fire marshal, has resigned, according to the information, and will be succeeded by Ernest Simpson, an inspector employed in the insurance division of public prints, however, did not tell it all. Mr. Wallace will still be connected with the department but only in a district way. His is to have headquarters at Sauk Center, where he conducts a paper, and his pay will be $1,800 a year. Mr. Wallace formerly was a paper at Fairmont and he was in charge there when he became connected with the marshal's office. Since Aug. 1 his publishing business has been centered in Sauk Center and it was there where his official troubles began. It opened the way to care for a rival and Mr. Wallace gracefully gave way.

P. M. Rindal is the latest member of the state executive council to be cared for in a national way. National Committeeman Lynch recommended him for secretary of the Crookston land office and President Wilson has sent his name to the senate for confirmation. Frank King of Grand Rapids is the other member of the council to be favored. He is to be receiver of the land office at Duluth. Both positions pay about $3,000 a year.

Rumors are frequent down here that Congressman Hammond, Democrat, of the Minneapolis district, and Congressman Lindbergh, Republican, at the present congress, are preparing to forego a Washington residence for a try at the governorship. There is nothing to it. Mr. Lindbergh has expressed himself as Congressman Hammond has himself on the matter any day, said that he would not run for governor under any circumstances.

The state railway and warehouse commission has taken a hand in the row on the Cushman distance tariff, which will be effective Dec. 1. The advisory rate made by the commission under the new law received scant attention in getting through the proceedings could not but be impressed by the declaration made by former Commissioner Neal E. T. Young that the roads were trying to take the law as emasculate as possible. This declaration came when the roads took up the proposition to continue the office of St. Paul and Minneapolis and have a lawyer there to look after matters, was to make the law to abbreviate as to compel its repeal.

In a speech at Red Wing D. H. Nelli was introduced by Governor Eberhart and President Vincent of the state university as the man in the tallest absence from their official duties. Governor Eberhart, it was decided, was doing too much visiting outside the state. How Mr. Nelli, who was a candidate for the Republican nomination for lieutenant governor against Governor Eberhart, is not known. How his criticism is viewed by the governor may be gathered in his own words when he said: "I am advertising Minnesota and her splendid crops. I am selected Governor Eberhart is still traveling and I have a hunch that he will continue to do so despite Mr. Nelli's criticism.

Chief Deputy Worden Cales of the Stillwater prison succeeded with his superior, Warden Wolfer, and then some. Wolfer and day the army occupied a prominent place in the Twin City prints and then the whole thing was dropped. Both officials suddenly agreed upon a policy of silence. Warden Wolfer is the typical sphinx and he has demonstrated his claim to the title on more than one occasion. According to his own statement he will quit the wardenship next year.

I WONDER what I can have done
To merit all this trouble—
What my offense? I have no fun
And bent until I'm double!

This morning all the folks rushed out
The children talk of Thanksgiving!
And here and there and round about
Oh, my, I wish I knew the festal
Until I was quite dismayed!
These rumors are depressing!

I ran toward the farmer's wife
But all the future I can see
"And thought she would befriend me,
Looks very, very murky.
I've seen a change in Ella—
Next year I'll either be
Did nothing to defend me!
A chicken than a turkey.

INSTEAD, she grabbed me by a foot
With no consideration,
And I'm the prize I were put
Without an explanation.

The farmer's sharpening an axe,
The children talk of "dressing."
Oh, my, I wish I knew the festal
These rumors are depressing!

LOVE ON THE CORNER

By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1913, by Associated Literary Press.

Hayling been informed that the shoestring man of the corner of Broadway and White street had had a difficulty with the peanut woman at the corner of Broadway and Chatham and that they were no longer on speaking terms, I went over there the other day in the hopes to bring about a reconciliation. I thought to see the woman there but half a square away I met my old friend Ellis, the umbrella mender, and he was very much surprised at my errand he said:

"It's a great blan and one worthy of the twentieth century, but it is too late. The peanut woman says that the shoestring man made up a face at her only an hour ago as he passed, and anything like bridging the chasm is now utterly impossible."

I then changed the plan and saw the shoestring man from there. You, who know him only by sight, may think him a very mild and docile citizen, having neither spirit, pride nor ambition. But such is far from being the case.

"Yes, sir; it is true," he replied when I told him I had heard of the rupture. "For seven long years I have been the warm friend of the peanut woman—but now all is over between us. I shall always respect her as a lady, but I can never be friends again. The relations between us are forever broken and entirely severed."

"But what caused the rupture?"

"Well, you see, just now, though it's perhaps owing to Ellis, the umbrella man, more than anything else. There is a big corner in nuts and I had to look out for. I don't say that he can't whip me in a scrimmage any day of the week, or that he would overcharge you, but secretly he's full of underhanded ways."

"Why, I thought Ellis such a nice man that I have often gone out of my way down in Chambers street yesterday."

"Look out for him, sir. I can be made all the trouble between me and the peanut woman."

"Now, besides Ellis, were you and the peanut woman a little sweet on each other before the row, or was the field to make trouble?"

"I am sorry to say that, sir. I called her Annie and she called me Charlie, but at present she won a bit lonesome if I didn't come in three or four times a day. It was me who wheeled her cart across Broadway twice a day for her; I watched the papers to see if peanuts went up or down; I turned the roaster for her when my own trade was slack, and for the last five years her shoestring has been a regular part of her outfit?"

"About three months, sir. It wasn't much at first, but I bought her an umbrella for her without charging a cent that I began to observe a change in her. She no longer called me Charlie. She looked at me coldly. Indeed, sir, it struck me at once that she preferred an umbrella man."

"And then you ellis appeared in the case?"

"Well, there was Glass-to-Put-In, who hung about for awhile, but he's a harmless old chap, and I don't think he's been married for more than a year, so you was in the past. I wouldn't give me shoestring man for a dozen umbrella menders."

"Well, it is a sad case, and I want to see it straightened out. I'm going down to have a talk with her and find out the true state of affairs."

"I wish you would, sir. To say nothing of my private feelings, it really interrupts business on Broadway and is against good interest. Come and have a talk, sir, and don't be afraid to come out until the worst."

I went down to see the peanut woman and began by asking:

"Have you a heart?"

"Yes, and the shoestring man has a wink," she replied with a toss of her head.

"Just what do you mean?"

"Oh, nothing, only standing on the corner and I want to tell you that I didn't start it. Five minutes after Charlie had told me the other day that I had the nicest figure of any woman walking Broadway I caught him winking at Ellis."

"And are you punishing him for it?"

"That's it, sir. Do you think he's unfeeling?"

"Perhaps. He looks like a man thinking of suicide."

"Eh? But I mustn't be too cruel. If you are going up that way you might hint that if he and I ate air tight together——"

I hinted, and am happy to say that the settlement was reading on the same bunch again, and that business on Broadway has resumed its normal swing.

Try a Weedchuck!

"I tried to dine on a woodchuck once when I was a boy, but never have felt inclined to repeat the experiment," says John Burroughs in the Century. "If one were born in the woods and lived in the woods maybe he could relish a woodchuck. Talk about being smoked bacon and savoring of the wild—try a woodchuck! The feeding habits of this animal are as cleanly as those of a sheep or a cow—clover, grain, peas, beans, cucumbers, cabbages, apples—all sweet and succulent things go to the making of his fishy body; yet he spends so much of his time in pickle in the ground that his flesh is rank with the earth flavor."

The Long and the Short of It.

Mrs. Lorraine in "The Court Painter and His Circle" tells a good story of the Cheralier de Colgny. When a very young man, fresh from college was developing with Mme. Geoffrin and telling an overlong story. In order to interrupt it his friend cut him short and gave a chicken. He began to do so, making use of much too small a knife, but Madame, noticing his difficulty, remarked, "M. le Chevalier, take my gloves, and if you cannot succeed with short stories and use long knives."

MINNESOTA'S GREAT MINERAL WEALTH

TOTAL MINERAL PRODUCTION IN 1912 IS $88,000,000, A GAIN OF OVER $13,000,000.

Because of its great wealth and extensive development of iron ores, Minnesota, ranks ninth among all the states in the value of its mineral production. In the output of iron ore Minnesota far outranks all other states, and during the last three years it has contributed both in quantity and value considerably more than half of the iron ore produced and marketed in the United States, according to Edward W. Perker, of the United States Geological Survey. In 1912 the total marketed production of iron ore in the United States was 57,037,574 long tons, valued at $267,050,152, of which Minnesota contributed 34,549,817 long tons, valued at $81,805,017. By far the largest part of the iron ore produced in this state comes from the Mesabi iron range, now the most important iron-producing district in the world. The Mesabi is the youngest in the great iron ranges, the Cuyuna range, which has developed in the last two or three years, but having attained notable prominence as the close of 1912; in which year its production amounted to 305,739 long tons. The Mesabi range was opened in 1892, and yielded a production in that year of less than 20,000 tons. In 1894 it yielded nearly 2,000,000 tons; in 1902 it produced over 13,000,000 tons, or nearly half of the total output of the Lake Superior iron ore. The Mesabi range reached its highest producing point in 1913, with an output of 32,694,766 long tons.

Exclusive of the iron ore the value of the mineral products of Minnesota in 1912 was $4,867,712. Of these last imported products the principal items are from the quarries and clay pits, which yield products of almost equal value. In 1911 the clay products, exclusive of the pottery, were valued at $1,631,040, and the stone output at $1,846,746.

The total value of the mineral products in Minnesota in 1912 was $16,677,729, against $13,256,881 in 1911, an increase of $13,376,848.

YOUNG MAN NEARLY DROWNS.

Morris Robbecke Falls Through Ice And is Rescued by Stranger.

While crossing the mill pond in the rear of the George Elder residence on Red Lake Boulevard last Sunday Morrel Robbecke broke thru the ice and narrowly escaped drowning. A stranger who happened to be near heard the cries for help and pushed a ladder out over the fully frozen surface of the river. Morris was wearing a heavy winter overcoat and even with the assistance of the ladder had difficulty in getting to shore.

Morris is always the first east side resident to try the popular short cut across the pond. For the past several successive years he has made the attempt too early and his pre-Thanksgiving out door bath is rapidly becoming tradition. The more conservative townsmen never make crossing the river on the ice a practice until at least two weeks after Morris has taken his annual plunge.—Thief River ews-Press.

Post-Card Politics.

"Why is there such a hot fight over the appointment of a post-master in this little town?" asked the stranger. "The office doesn't pay anything much, does it?"

"That aint it, mister," replied the native. "You see most of us are particular as to who reads our postal cards."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Alfalfa Seed.

There is a great demand for Northern grown alfalfa seed at the present time. Alfalfa has grown with such good results that a greatly increased acreage is certain to come. It is time to begin to get seed that will be needed. A movement is now on foot to secure several thousand pounds of hardy northern grown seed. Any farmers interested should write to North west Experiment Farm, Crookston, for full information regarding the seed. It is absolutely necessary to secure a hardy strain of seed. It can be secured at a moderate price now but it must be ordered early.

Council Proceedings.

Regular meeting of the City Council held at the Council Rooms November 6th, 1912.

Meeting called to order by President Crompe.

All members present.

Alderman Hunt offered the following resolution and moved its adoption, seconded by Alderman Hoberg:—

Resolved, that the following bills be, and they are hereby allowed:—

E. E. Fletcher, judge of election	4.00
Jos. Tushart, judge of election and bringing returns	6.70
E. A. Moran, judge of election	4.00
J. F. Harvey, judge of election and returns	6.40
Wm. McIntosh, judge of election	4.85
Fred Krueger, judge of election	4.35
Eus. Normandeau, judge of election	4.35
Frank Grenier, judge of election and returns	4.05
John Dufour, judge of election	5.05
Alex Tushart, clerk of election	4.00

SYNOPSIS.

Minnie, spring-house girl at Hope sanatorium, tells its story. It opens with the arrival of Mr. Jennings, who is reported to be engaged to marry a prince, and the doings of Mrs. Jennings' maid and the sanatorium. The maid is a kleptomaniac grandson, Dicky Carter, who is the nephew, on a certain date and runs the sanatorium. Dr. Richard Carter for two months or forfeit the income of his share of maiden Dicky Dick's arrival. Mr. Thorburn is hovering about in hopes of securing Hope for his own. Dr. Richard Carter, a neighbor, is in love with Minnie. Invalided upon by Van Alstyne, Dicky's landlord, in his kleptomaniac, he leaves for Hope and take charge of the sanatorium until Dr. Richard arrives. Mr. Thorburn escapes with Dorothy, a nurse, and Dr. Richard arrives.

"We were held up by the snow," he explained. "We got a sleigh to come over in, but we walked up the hill and came here. I don't mind saying that my wife's people don't know about this yet, and we're going to lay low until we've cooked up some sort of a scheme to tell them. Then he came over and put his hand on my shoulder.

"Poor old Minnie!" he said; "honest, I'm sorry. I've been a hard child to rules, haven't I? But that's all over, Minnie. I've got an incentive now, and it's Wendy, old boy. Come on. You and I will run the place and run it right."

"I don't want to!" I retorted, holding my bedroom slippers to steam before the fire. "I'm going to lay out Thimmo's candy store and live a quiet life, Mr. Dick. This place is making me old."

"Nonsense! We're going to work together, and we'll make this the healthiest spot in seven counties. Dorothy and I have got it all planned out and we've got some corking good ideas." He put his hands in his pockets and strutted up and down. "It's the day of advertising, you know, Minnie," he said. "You've got to have the goods, and then you've got to let people know you've got the goods. What would you say to a shooting-gallery in the basement, under the reading-room?"

I couldn't be light-hearted to save my life.

"Your sister's been mild all day," I told Mrs. Dick. "She got a letter from to-day—yesterday—but I don't think she's told your father yet."

"What!" he exclaimed, and caught at the mantel-piece to hold herself. "Not Pat!" she said, horrified. "Not my father! Here?"

Well, I fluttered while they told me. They hadn't had the faintest idea that Mr. Jennings and Miss Patty were there at the same time.

"The idea was this, Minnie," said Mr. Dick. "Old—I mean Mr. Jennings's—is not well; he has a chronic indigestion—"

"Disposition, I call it," put in Mr. Jennings.

"And he's apt to regard my running away with Dorothy when I haven't a penny to carve of an embarrassment than on elopement."

"Fiddle!" exclaimed Mrs. Dick. "I asked you to marry me, and now they're here and have to spoil it all!"

The thought of her sister's selfish disposition suddenly overpowered her and she cut her yellow head on the back of a chair and began to cry.

"I—can't tell him!" she sobbed. "I wrote to Pat—why doesn't Pat tell him? Maybe she will think of some way to break it to him. She can do a lot with father."

"I hope she can think of some way to break another Richard Carter to the people of the house," I said tartly.

"Another Richard Carter!" they said together, and then I told them about how we had waited and waited and how a will had been brought in Mr. Pierce at the last minute and that he was asleep now at the house. They roared. To save my life I couldn't see that it was funny. But when I came to the part about Thorburn being there, and his having had a good look at Mr. Pierce, and that he was waiting around with his jaws open to snap up the place when it fell under the hammer, Mr. Dick stopped laughing and looked serious.

"It's possible we can get by Thorburn," I said. "You can slip in to-night, we can get Mr. Pierce out—Lord knows he'll be glad to go—and Miss Dorothy can go back to school. Then, later, when you've got things running and are making good—"

"I'm not going back to school," she declared, "but I'll go away; I'll not stand in your way, Dicky." She took two steps toward the door and waited for him to stop her.

"Nonsense, Sadie," he exclaimed angrily and put his arm around her, "I won't be separated from my wife. You could go to the old shelter-house on the golf links, and nobody'd be any the wiser. Dicky never knew he had been blind there before, I 'Nobody ever goes near it in winter." So I put on my slippers again and we started through the snow across the golf links, Mr. Dick carrying a bundle of firewood, and I leading the way with my lantern.

We got into the shelter-house by my crawling through the window, and when we had lighted the fire and hung up the lantern it didn't seem so bad. There were two rooms, and Mr. Dick had always used the back one to hide in. It's a good thing Mrs. Dick was not a suspicious person. Many a woman would have been jealous of me who saw him lift a board in the floor and take out a roast fowl, a can of soup, a moldy towel, a can of sardines, a tooth-brush and a rubber carriage robe to lay over the rafters under the hole in the roof. But it's been my experience that the first few days of married life women are blind because they want to be and after that because they have to be.

It was about four when I left them, sitting on a soap box in front of a fire roasting sardines on the end of Mr. Dick's walking-stick. Mrs. Dick made me put on her sealskin coat, and I took the lantern, leaving them in the firelight.

I took a short cut home, crawling through the barbed-wire fence and going through the deer park. I was too tired and cold to think.

CHAPTER V.

I lay down across my bed at six o'clock that morning, but I was too tired and worried to sleep, so at seven I got up and dressed. I put on two pairs of stockings and heavy shoes, for I knew I was going to do the Eskimo act again that day and goodness knows how many days more, and then I went down and knocked at the door of Miss Patty's room. She hadn't been undressed, either. She called to me in an undertone to come in, and she was lying propped up with pillows, with something pink around her shoulders and the night lamp burning beside the bed.

I walked over to the foot of the bed. "Pat!" I said.

She sat up, and some letters slid to the floor.

"They're here!" she repeated. "Do you mean Dorothy?"

"She and her husband. They came here last night at five minutes to twelve. Their train was held up by the blizzard and they won't come in until this afternoon. They're hiding in the shelter-house on the golf links."

"Dicky, Dicky!" she cried, and wrung her hands. "How could you?" she said, and got up.

It wasn't comfortable for Mr. Dick, and I'm sure he knew it, but I wasn't expected. He went over and gave his wife a hand to help her up, and after holding here, he turned to Miss Patty.

"I'm perfectly right," he said coldly. "I don't see how she could myself. The only reason I've come of me the more you'll wonder. She did it on a bet with Minnie here."

He grinned at Miss Patty, and after a minute Miss Patty smiled back. But it was a watery smile, and I felt sorry for Dick made a dive for Miss Patty and threw her arms around her.

"You darling!" she cried. "I'm so glad to see you again—Pat, you'll tell father, won't you? He'll take it better from you. If I tell him he'll have apoplexy or something."

But Miss Patty sat her pretty mouth —both those girls have their father's mouth—and held her sister away at arm's length and looked at her.

"Listen," she said. "Do you know what you have done to me? Do you realize that you've made me party to a going to cancel the marriage or have Mr. Carter arrested for kidnaping or abduction?—whatever it is." Mrs. Dick puckered her face to cry, and Mr. Dick took a step forward, but Miss Patty waved him off. "You know father as well as I do, Dolly. You have what he is, and lately he's been awful!"

"He can't cancel it," said Mr. Dick gogrily. "I've of age. And I can support my wife, too, or will be shortly."

"Dolly's not of age," said Miss Patty vexatiously. "I've sat up all night figuring how much it is. He's going to annul the marriage, or he'll make a scandal anyhow, and that's just as bad. Dolly"—she turned to her sister imploringly—"Dolly, I can't have a scandal now. You've got to help me. You've always taken this, anyhow; they've given in because he insisted, but they don't want me, and if there's a lot of publicity now the umpire will send him up to Africa or some place, and—"

"If you really want me to be happy," Mrs. Dick said, looking around the room, "and now he's putting a scandal over on me, I'll—I'll—"

"I won't leave Dicky." She swung across the room and, Dick not altering glance, and Miss Patty looked discouraged.

"Come in with you," she said. "Isn't there some place near where he could stay, and telephone run now and then?"

"Telephone!" said Mrs. Dick scornfully.

"Can't leave," Mr. Dick objected. "Got to be on the property. Look here, Miss—Miss Patricia, why can't we stay here, where we are? It's very comfortable—that is, it's livable. They've got everybody to look after my place in the house."

"And father needn't know a thing—you can fix that," said Mrs. Dick.

"And after your wedding he will be a better humor; he'll know it's over and not up to him any more."

Miss Patty sat down on the soap box.

"We might carry it off," she said. "If I could only go back to-now! But father is in one of his tantrums, and he won't go, or let me go. The idea!—with Aunt Hannah on the long-distance wire every day, having typhoid, and my clothes waiting to be tried on and everything. I'm desperate."

I left the eggs on a hot platter and poured the coffee, and we all sat around the soap box and ate.

Everybody felt better for the meal, and we were sitting there laughing and talking and very cheerful when Miss Alstyne opened the door and looked in. His face was stern, but when he saw us, with Miss Patty on her knees toasting a piece of bread and Mr. Dicky passing the tin basin as a finger-bowl, he stopped scowling and looked amused.

"They're here, Sallie," he called to his wife, and they both came in, covered with snow, and we had coffee and eggs all over again.

Well, they stayed for an hour, and Mr. Sam talked himself black in the face and couldn't get anywhere. So finally he gave up and said he washed his hands of the whole affair, and that he was going to make another start on his wedding journey, and if they wanted to be a pair of fools it wasn't up to him—only for heaven's sake not to cry about it.

And when the Dickys found they were not going to be arrested we had more coffee all around and everybody grew more cheerful.

Oh, we were very cheerful! I look back now and think how cheerful we were, and I shudder. We sat around the fire and ate and laughed, and Mr. Dick arranged that Mr. Pierce should come out to him every evening for orders about the place—if he accepted, and everybody felt he would—and I was to come at the same time and bring a basket of provisions for the next day. Of course, the instant Mr. Jennings left the young couple could go into the sanatorium as guests under another name and be married. And as soon as the time limit was up, they could declare that they were not, and the sanatorium, being fulfilled the contract, could go to hell, and confess to Mr. Jennings—over the long-distance wire.

Well, it promised well, I must say. Mr. Sam left on the noon train that morning, looking lemon-colored and mottled. He insisted that he wasn't going to, and Mr. Sam grew into a headache powder and put him on the train, sulky.

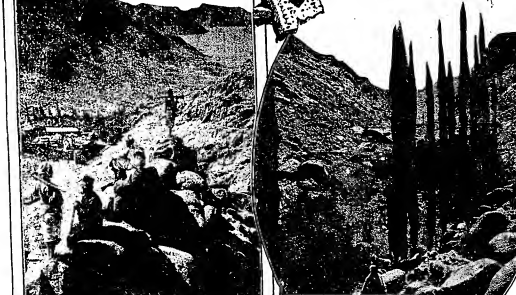
Yes, as I say, it promised well. But we hadn't two minutes of daylight to count on Mr. Thorburn, and we didn't count on Mr. Pierce. And who could have imagined that Mr. Pierce would do as he did?

After dinner, when everybody at Hope Springs takes a nap, we had another council of war in the shelter-house, this time with Mr. Pierce. He looked dazed when I asked him to the shelter-house and he saw Mr. Dick and Mr. Sam and Miss Patty. That gave him a turn. After every thing had been explained, including Mr. Sam's being dead, and disposing of him, he turned to him and said:

"Then you're not going to marry me, Mr. Pierce. Are you going to help us?" Mr. Pierce gave his instructions. I daresay I interrupted two seconds ever since she came, and held a woman and-her-ing a point to gain, Miss Patty seemed to have forgotten the night before, and was very glad to be alive

To SEARCH Mt. SINAI for ORIGINAL GOSPEL

PRESS COPYRIGHT SYNDICATE, NEW YORK, 1912



Monastery of St. Catherine

View in the Valley

NEXT to the Holy Land the most interesting region in the world to Biblical scholars is the Sinaitic peninsula. Is one respect it is even more interesting than the Holy Land, for the wealth of relics and manuscripts which it contains has hardly been touched by modern investigators.

An important movement has now been started by the convention, scholars and religious leaders of England to conduct a thorough search of the Monastery of St. Catherine, on Mount Sinai, where it is believed that the oldest existing Biblio manuscripts are to be found.

Discoveries already made indicate with practical certainty that these manuscripts must be there, but for peculiar reasons very little progress has been made in searching for them. During the years 1844, 1853 and 1859 the German scholar Tischendorf spent much time exploring the monastery library.

The monks were then very simple and hospitable and quite unfamiliar with the ways of the outside world. They allowed Tischendorf to do as he pleased in the library. He used this liberty with stupendously profitable results to himself. He discovered the oldest known Greek manuscript of the Bible, now known as the "Codex Sinaiticus." By some mistake it is dated as early as the fourth century, and to that case it is the oldest practically complete manuscript of the Bible. It consists of most of the Old Testament, all the New Testament and "the Epistle of Barnabas."

This wonderful collection of manuscripts Tischendorf carried away without saying a word to the monks. There are doubtless collectors today who would give $1,000,000 for these manuscripts. When the monks slowly realized that they had been robbed of one of the most precious possessions in the religious world, they became very angry, and their anger lasted a long time.

For years travelers who visited the out-of-the-world monastery reported that the monks were surly and inhospitable, and would not afford a reasonable opportunity for an examination of their treasures. Many of these visitors reported that the monks were ill-adapted by their manners to a deplorable manner, using them as stands for cooking utensils and flower pots.

Finally, in 1894, two brilliant Englishwomen—Mrs. Smith Lewis and Mrs. Gibson—succeeded in winning the confidence of the monks and secured permission to make an examination of the library. Their search was richly rewarded, for they discovered a fourth century palimpsest manuscript of St. Paul's Gospel in Syriac. This is probably the oldest known Bible manuscript, for the Tischendorf Codex, even allowing for the oldest date mentioned, would barely excel it.

Mrs. Lewis and Mrs. Gibson found that in order to put the library in thorough order and reveal even superficially all that it contained would require the labors of a considerable staff of trained workers. Although the monks gave facilities to the two women, they were not willing to admit any considerable body of investigators to the monastery, in view of their bitter experience of earlier years.

The present movement aims to overcome the objections of the monks to a friendly mission. The Sinaitic Peninsula is now in Egyptian territory. When the concessionary Pasha have selected the assistance of the Egyptian authorities will be sought in carrying on negotiations with the monks.

Among the most precious manuscripts believed to be in the monastery is the original of the Gospel of St. Luke in the handwriting of the apostle himself. This would be incomparably the most important Biblio manuscript ever discovered. The Syriac copy of St. Luke's gospel found by the two English women and at present constituting the oldest known Biblio manuscript contains evidence that it was translated from a Greek original in the library.

Spot on Which Moses Read Ten Commandments

Scholars hold that the original Gospel of St. Luke was in Greek. The apostle was a physician of Greek descent, and his gospel gives evidence of scholarly attainments. Early chronicles state that the manuscripts of St. Luke's gospel was one of the treasures given to the monastery by the Emperor Justinian in 527 A. D. The building contains numerous representations of the apostle (writing the gospel), and these appear to have a close association with the foundation of the establishment.

The library is known to contain about 200 ancient volumes filled with manuscripts in Greek, Arabic, Syriac and other languages. As one of these great volumes may contain hundreds of manuscripts, the wealth of the library can only be guessed at. Among its curiosities is a very ancient complete manuscript of the Psalms, written on its leaves in microscopic writing.

The monastery is the oldest continuously inhabited building in the world. It was founded by Justinian in about 527 A. D., and has been occupied ever since. It is surrounded by walls 30 feet high, and defended by cannon, for it was cut off from the civilized world for centuries. Until recently everybody who entered was hoisted by a rope over these walls.

The earth on which the vegetables of the monastery are grown was brought from the Holy Land, for there is no soil in the vicinity. In the first few centuries of the Christian church the Sinaitic Peninsula was the refuge of many Christians fleeing from the Roman persecution. Then the church triumphed and for centuries after the founding of the monastery it was honored by gifts from emperors and kings.

Then came the Mohammedan outbreak. During the centuries when the followers of the Prophet overran the eastern world this little spot held out for Christianity.

The convent stands at the foot of the mountain called Jebel Musa, which, according to many authorities, is the actual mountain where the Ten Commandments were committed to Moses by the Lord. The site of the monastery, according to this theory, is the spot where Moses delivered the Commandments to the children of Israel. This is a disputed point, but there is little doubt that it is an important site, for the natives in all ages have revered it.

Here passed the children of Israel during their 40 years' wandering on their way from Egypt to the Holy Land. Here occurred the many miracles and wonderful events of the Exodus—the cloud by day and the pillar of fire by night, the feeding of the people with manna, the miraculous production of water by Moses, the battle with the Amalekites, the appearance of the Lord on the mount, the building of the Ark, the worshipping of the golden calf, the bedding of Aaron's rod, the relating of the brazen serpent by Moses an finally the death of Moses.

The Sinaitic Peninsula covers about 10,000 square miles, and there was plenty of room for the 40 years' wandering. The traveler who sees the land today can easily understand why miracles were necessary to keep the children of Israel alive. It is an exceedingly barren wilderness, largely composed of rocks. It only contains a handful of natives, and it is believed that the number has hardly changed since prehistoric times. Though barren, the land is very picturesque, and the red mountains rising abruptly into the clear sky are wonderful.

Nearly all the sites mentioned in Exodus and the other books of the Old Testament are identified by the monks and by local traditions. There is a peak called Jebel Ras-es-Sefsaf, which is said to be the exact spot from which Moses witnessed the worshipping of the golden calf by the children of Israel. It is a small peak, giving an excellent view of a large plain, which might very well have been the place where the Israelites indulged in their idolatrous festivities, as described in Exodus:

"And it came to pass as soon as he came nigh unto the camp that he saw the calf and the dancing: and Moses's anger waxed hot, and he cast the the tables out of his hands and brake them beneath the mount.

"And he took the calf which they had made and burnt it in the fire, and ground it to powder, and strowed it upon the water, and made the children of Israel drink of it."

The peak where Moses is reputed to have witnessed this scene is part of the same group where the leader of the Jews received from God the Ten Commandments from heaven. The local traditions assigning sites for all these ancient occurrences seem very reasonable.

DOUBLE VISION.

Police Magistrate—How'd Oi seen yez here twice before?

Prisoner—Only once, yer ahner, an' that was last Patrick's day.

Police Magistrate—St. Patrick's day, was it? Well, thot explains it. Oi must av seen two of yez.—Puck.

UNPROFESSIONAL.

Bowers—I'm sorry you lost your lawsuit.

Bowers—Well, I ought to have known that my attorney was no good.

Bowers—Why?

Bowers—The very first time the case was called he told the judge he was ready to go on.—Puck.

ALL AT WORK.

"All of a sudden you don't seem to hear anything more about futurists. I wonder what has happened?"

"Wait till the whitewashing season is over. Take it from me, they'll both up into prominence again."

A LADIES' MAN.

"A bomb!"

"Put it in water," said the chief of police.

"A suffragette bomb?"

"Put it in Florida water. Ah, the dear girls."

BEST PRINT FOR THE EYES

Point That is of Much Importance and Is Not Given Proper Consideration.

According to the report of a committee of English physicians, who have just completed an investigation of the subject, the poor quality of the print used in many of the books and magazines children read is causing serious injury every day to an alarmingly large number of eyes.

After making a careful study of the various styles of type and their effect upon the vision, the committee declares that no child should be allowed to make a practice of reading any printed matter unless each letter is in clean cut and well defined. Very condensed or compressed type was found to be very harmful for breadth is even more important than height in lessening the strain upon the eyes.

The contrast between the finer and the heavier strokes of the letters should not be too great on account of the difficulty of seeing the hair strokes. On the other hand, a very heavy faced type suffers in legibility through diminution of the white interspaces, example, when the space in the upper half of the e is reduced to a white dot.

The ideal type for children's eyes as well as for those of elder persons was found to be one in which the whites and blacks are so well balanced in each letter that it is easy to discriminate between a, o and e, between I and l and between h and k, and to differentiate m, nn, nn, w and u. The general form of the letters should be broad and square, rather than elongated vertically, and the letter s should approach close to the perfect circle.

FIND ARMY REFUGE

Picturesque French Foreign Legion—Stories Regarding It.

Men Seek it for Oblivion—Some Sought Have Been Found, but Others Have Succeeded in Concealing Their Identity.

Paris.—The French foreign legion is the most picturesque military organization in the world. It is the refuge of men gone wrong through impulse or misfortune who wish to bury themselves in oblivion while fighting to regain an honorable place in the world of life and activity.

Of the foreign legion a thousand romantic tales are told. In answer to German critics, General Brunoau, who commanded the second regiment of the organization, has recently related some of his experiences and unveiled certain of its mysteries. The rank and file of the corps, he says, is composed of princes, dukes, marquises, counts and viscounts, generals and officers of all grades, all arms, of the armies of all countries, magistrates, priests, financiers, diplomats, lawyers and professional functionaries of all sorts; honest adventurers who simply want to "see the world;" the swarmathonic, the disheartened, the unemployed; those who, having lost everything but honor, or having lost honor itself, would make a new start.

All the diverse human metal, thrown into the melting pot together, is eventually molded into that brave, stoic, loyal, devoted, patient and tenacious prototype of the man of arms, the legionary.

The most remarkable story of all connected with the legion is that of a soldier of the second class—another Fadeo—who died in the hospital at Garrytilla. Rumor has it that he was a bona fide Hohenzollern, a cousin of the kaiser himself. Efforts to trace his career or to identify him definitely have so far failed, though the splendid se so fully authenticated as to leave little doubt that a scapegrace member of the imperial family of Germany did take refuge under its mysterious banner.

Only a few months ago France had the laugh on her neighbor over the case of one "Tunzo, No. 12,617," a recruit of the legion at Saida, whose real name turned out to be Trocmel, the missing mayor of the Usedom, in Pomerania. In the regiment at Saida Trocmel met Sergeant von Selomon, who was formerly in his regiment in the German army. In those days, says Trocmel, "he selcted me; now I salute him."

Some years ago General Brunoan had occasion to visit the tent of General Detrie, then in chief command of the legion. It was during the grand maneuvers of the French army.

"As I approached the tent," writes the general, "I was struck with the noble appearance of the sentry on guard and the superb manner in which he rendered me his salute. At the conclusion of my visit, as I was about to take my departure, the general said to me, sotto voce: 'You see that sentry? He is Mgr. X—, bishop of Barinthia, the handsomest man and the best soldier in the legion!'

"I glanced the bishop over, in passing, with an interested curiosity. He had doubtless overheard the general's remark, for he suddenly turned pale, and his pallor was accentuated by the contrast of a beard as black as jet, though with a few threads of silver in it, that fell in silken waves down to the Teutha medal on the breast of his capote. The splendid eyes looked straight ahead—toward the distant mountains, where the sun was staking out a tunnel of gold—but I had the impression that their gaze rested upon something far more distant, and that the light which illuminated his face was not the reflected radiance of the setting sun, but came from candles burning before the imaged Christ amid the somber glories of a church altar."

After the prelate, the millionaire. One day General Brunoan received a registered letter, postmarked Vienna and signed by the representative of a well known Austrian detective agency, to the following effect:

"Monsieur le General: Will you kindly inform me if a young men of Austro-Hungarian nationality, supposed to have enlisted in the Foreign Legion under the name of Junius Perth, is now at Saida? I have already inquired, to vain, of the First regiment. You will understand the interest we have in finding him when I inform you, confidentially, that in consequence of unforeseen happenings, he has become, without his knowledge or expectations, sole heir to a fortune of 12,000,000 crowns. Inclosed is a photograph, taken when he was a student at the University of Prague.

The photograph showed a stocky youth of perhaps twenty or twenty-two years of age, and whose name what hasty face was fringed with precocious whiskers. He wore eyeglasses, which gave him a spoon, and something far more distant, and that the light which illuminated his face was not the reflected radiance of the setting sun, but came from candles burning before the imaged Christ amid the somber glories of a church altar."

Montana Owners Have Difficulty in Raising Crop of Mountain Sheep in Captivity.

Anaconda, Mont.—Fultz, the only mountain sheep known to be in captivity, after a series of troubles that would fill half a dozen ordinary sheep, and having been cared for by a private here several times, is now in the best of health and will grow prouder that record as a ripe old age.

If he does not, it will not be the fault of his attendants. Fultz has had enough money spent on his account to build a palace for a mountain sheep—if maturity and caused more sleepless nights than all the other things that are dessert on the sheep bill of fare.

A free demonstration of a laclen tific principle may be observed by visiting the Clearwater river bank just south of the city hall at 2 p. m. is a fire that nobody "started". Some oil-soaked waste in the trees on the river bank. Later sweepings from the yard were thrown in the same place, covering the rags. The rags "heated" and now there is a nice little fire due to "spontaneous combustion". Rats nest miles and defective flues have been blamed for starting fires that have resulted from the primary cause but left the buildings. People who have heretofore doubted the terrors of fire from spontaneous combustion, should look in on this demonstration on the river bank and deposit cigars, matches, etc., in the place where they will do no damage when they "combust".

Mr. Crompe and the members of his family have many friends in the city who regret their going and yet will wish for their contentment and prosperity in their new home and take pleasure that republican has come to Mr. Crompe in promotion. Mr. Crompe will be succeeded as manager of the local yard by James Hance who has for many years been manager of the Red Lake Falls Milling company's Great Northern house.

THIEF RIVER MAN (?) ARRESTED

St. Cloud Police Look For One Godfrey Who Passed Bad Check.

Chief of Police Erickson received a communication last Friday from the St. Cloud authorities inquiring as to the identity and whereabouts of a man by the name of Godfrey who has passed a check in St. Cloud payable at one of the local banks, and claimed this city as his home. The check was returned to St. Cloud bearing a "no funds" stamp.

The letter further said that Godfray had passed through St. Cloud on November 6 driving an Oakland automobile stating that he was going from Thief River to Minneapolis in one day on a $200 bet with a prominent Thief River Falls business man. The check of $20 was given in payment for an inner tube and several repairs on the machine.

Inquiry here disclosed the fact that Godfrey was a transient cattle buyer who had operated in this vicinity several months ago.---Thief River Falls News-Press.

RED LAKE FALLS GAZETTE—ESTABLISHED 1903
RED LAKE COURIER—ESTABLISHED 1898

RED LAKE FALLS, RED LAKE COUNTY, MINNESOTA, THURSDAY, DECEMBER 11, 1913. VOL. XXXI—No. 11.

RED LAKE FALLS GAZETTE

NEW WINNIPEG LINE IS RUMOR

NEW LINE RED LAKE FALLS TO DRAYTON AS CONNECTING LINK.

The latest railroad rumor—and there have been many railroad rumors in northern Minnesota during the past few years—is that the Northern Pacific will build a new line from Red Lake Falls through Warren to Drayton. Just across the Red river in North Dakota, there connecting with the Winnipeg line.

The story is made more interesting by the further report that it is planned to make this line a link in the Winnipeg in twin cities run. Such a line would shorten the run forty or fifty miles, but would cut out Crookston and Grand Forks. It would open up much new territory now without railroad facilities—like this farming territory between this city and Warren and a large area of the Red River Valley north and west of Warren.

The Gazette does not know how much truth there may be in the rumor and publishes it simply as a report for the news value it has. Surely if the report is supported by fact it seems greatly improved transportation service for Red Lake Falls.

It is time that the Northern Pacific officials were to change the right of way through Red Lake Falls and build a depot nearer the business section of the city, for they are now paralleling for the greater part of its right of way. Just what improved train service that is going to bring or what if any connection it may have with the "silverbelt" line to change the Winnipeg run everybody has license to guess.

GET ALFALFA SEED WHILE YOU CAN

VALUABLE CROP CAN BE GROWN IN RED LAKE COUNTY SUCCESSFULLY.

The growing of alfalfa in Red Lake county has very nearly passed the experimental stage. It has been demonstrated on a considerable number of farms that this valuable forage crop and hay plant is well adapted for growth in this section and that it may be depended upon to produce a truly profitable crop every year. The very few failures can be accounted for with little difficulty. In nine cases out of ten where alfalfa fails either the seed used is not northern grown, or the soil lacks what is known as an inoculation.

Alfalfa seed that is raised in Kansas, Nebraska and adjoining states is not hardy in Minnesota. To plant this seed is to throw away money. Alfalfa, however, has been grown in Minnesota for fifty-seven years. In 1856 Peter Grimm came from Germany and settled in Carver county. He brought seed of the alfalfa he had grown in his native land. The only variety that can be depended on in this state is the so-called Grimm Alfalfa. A peculiarity of this variety is that it grows very rarely in this climate. The yield of hay is very high but the seed is produced in small amounts and irregularly. In order to meet the demand for seed this variety has been sown in the western states, especially Montana where it seeds very readily. It is the same variety but grown in a slightly different climate where the seed crop is greater and more dependable. "Montana Grimm" Alfalfa is hardy in Minnesota.

Alfalfa will not grow on an acid or sour soil. Your land always is sour and muck and gumbo soils are apt to be in this condition. The latter may be made fit for the growth of alfalfa by the application of lime in general any land may be made grow alfalfa successfully. Any soil that will grow medium red clover will grow alfalfa.

This plant, as well as the oh vers, requires for its successful growth certain germs in the soil. Red clover requires one kind of a germ, alsike another, and alfalfa still a different one. These germs are found in many soils, especially where there has been weed sweet clover, which requires for its growth exactly the same kind of germ that as does alfalfa.

Where these germs are not present it is necessary to add them artificially by the process called inoculation. The most satisfactory method of inoculation is to take soil from an alfalfa field and apply to the new field at the rate of about five hundred pounds to the acre, applying by hand and harrowing in immediately. The application should be made in April before seeding.

The Northern Minnesota Development association has contracted for a large amount of Montana Grimm Alfalfa seed to be laid down at some point in Northern Minnesota, probably Crookston, at twelve dollars a bushel or twenty cents a pound. Inferred locally it will cost between twenty and twenty-five cents a pound. The state guarantees the seed to be true to name, clean, and of high germinating quality. Seed fields from which the seed comes were examined personally last summer by A. D. Wilson, Supt. of Farmers' Institutes. Here is an opportunity to secure absolutely reliable seed at a reasonable figure. From twelve to fifteen pounds are required per acre.

Orders may be sent directly to Supt. C. G. Selvig, Experiment Station, Crookston, in the Merchants Bank Book of this city, or to the undersigned. Orders must be in before January first.—Paul Carpenter.

COURSE OF FINE ENTERTAINMENTS

TWO FIRST CLASS PROFESSIONAL AND ONE HOME TALENT ENTERTAINMENT.

Red Lake Falls people are to enjoy a course of three high-class entertainments during the winter. The entertainments are to be given on under the auspices of the Red Lake Falls band and are of unquestioned merit.

The first number will be the "Military Girls", a company of talented women musicians. A novel feature of their program will be selections by a fife and drum corps. Six young women participate in this blended string feature. There will be selections by a fife orchestra and other good features.

The second number of the course will be a home talent affair at one and that always delights Red Lake Falls people. There will be band selections and other interesting features.

The last number of the course to be given by Ray Packard, a cartoonist and humorist of nationwide reputation. Everybody should come will be said later.

The band boys have been to great expense in arranging to bring two high class entertainments to Red Lake Falls. They do not expect to make. They will be satisfied if they "break even". Their only object in the course is possible for Red Lake Falls people to enjoy the benefit of enjoying three good entertainments. This entertainment should be appreciated by a generous patronage of the three entertainments.

Season tickets are going to be offered for sale at $1.00, good ticket good for a reserved seat at each entertainment. A committee of the band boys' efforts will be shown by the generous purchase of season tickets. The admission charge for each entertainment separately will be 75 cents.

The "Military Girls" will be here in Jan. 15. The other two dates will be given Feb. 13 and Alice Packard's program will be given Feb. 20.

HUERTA LOSES ALL OF NORT.. MEXICO

SEVEN GENERALS OF REGULAR ARMY OFFER TO SURRENDER ALL TO REBELS.

FEDERALS ARE NOW BANKRUPT

Se States Proclamation Signed by General Mercado, Commander of Northern Regulars—Details of Chihuahua Evacuation.

Juarez, Mexico., Dec. 4.—Seven generals of the Mexican regular army are ready to surrender and the backbone of the Huerta dictatorship in the north has been broken. A peace commission arrived in Juarez bearing terms of the surrender.

Huerta Government Bankrupt.

The peace commission was headed by Odilon Scrnander and came from Chihuahua bearing a proclamation signed by General Salvador Mercado, Huerta's military governor and commander of the federal forces in the north. The proclamation stated that the Huerta government was bankrupt and was unable to pay its soldiers.

Fleeing over the desert and pursued by rebels, several thousand persons, including some of the richest families in northern Mexico who deserted Chihuahua city in fear of a rebel attack, are reported to be nearing the United States border.

Wealthy Mexican Fugitive.

Among the refugees is Luis Terrazas, head of the wealthy Terrazas estate, who is said to have with him 5,000,000 pesos which he withdrew from the Chihuahua banks.

Other wealthy families, including some of the Creels, are reported to have left the city, and the canvas in which are women and children, was described as being more than a mile long. At the head, with an escort of federal troops, is General Salvador Mercado, Huerta's deposed governor of Chihuahua state.

Details of the evacuation of the city and the remarkable exodus of the people were brought to Juarez in official dispatches from Frederico Moye, who was appointed civil governor ad interim.

Dispatch to Villa.

Moye's dispatch was addressed to General Francisco Villa and it called upon the rebel leader to take possession of the city. The fleets about the downfall of the Huerta power in the city as intensified by General Moye's act.

For almost three weeks, Chihuahua, with its 30,000 citizens, have been cut off from communication, the last dispatches were steadily decreasing and many deaths resulted from illness caused by semi-starvation. Rumors of the proposed attack on the city, exaggerated by reports that the rebels had been supplied with ammunition from the United States and that the city was to be bombarded, increased the anxiety.

Record of Villa.

General Villa, who now assumes military command of all the north and whose authority is second only to that of General Carranza, recognized as the revolutionary provisional president, entered the revolution five months ago with only a borrowed saddle horse. He is a former bandit and for twenty years, under Diaz, was sought as an outlaw.

Railway Contract Cancelled.

Mexico City.—Preferring to incur the displeasure of the Huerta government to a very practical realization of the rebels' wrath, the producers of all companies of the republic annulled their contracts for supplying the National Railways with oil.

PHILIPPINE POLICY DISCUSSED

Former Governor General Warns New Administration by Referring to Mexico.

Boston ,Dec. 4.—"Shall we make a second Mexico of the Philippine Islands?"

With this question W. Cameron Forbes, former governor general of Philippine Islands stored an address before the City club in which he had described the policy of the United States towards its dependency in the east and warned against a premature withdrawal of control.

"President Wilson has started upon a new policy in the Islands," said Mr. Forbes "I believe the motive underlying these changes is a praise-worthy desire to let the Filipinos show what they can do, and I do not feel that the experiment should be unduly restricted, but that we should take the position of lands of to let the people have a chance to work itself out and show what the result will be."

U. S. Autos to Save Mexicans.

Brownsville, Tex., Dec. 4.—Two automobiles are on their way from Matamoros at the expense of the United States government to rescue seven American missionaries at the Methodist church at Victoria, Mexico, where a famine of food and supplies is threatening. American Consul James R. Johnson, at Matamoros, who sent the automobiles, said it would require four days to get the missionaries to the border. They have arranged to turn over the schools they had under instruction to local teachers.

Report By Secretary McAdoo.

Washington, Dec. 4.—Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo, in his annual report, made public today, tells how his department restored confidence in the financial world twice during the year. The first instance was soon after the comm-ming of the special session, when he announced he was ready to deliver $500,000,000 in emergency currency to the banks. Again in August he offered to deposit for crop-moving purposes $46,000,000 in national banks in those parts of the country where it was needed.

CRAIG DEFENSE HAS INNING

WITNESSES WILL TRY TO ESTABLISH AN ALIBI.

Alleged That Woman Took Her Own Life After Meeting With Business Reverses.

Shelbyville, Ind., Dec. 4.—The defense had its inning in the trial of Dr. William B. Craig for the murder of Dr. Helen Keehn in a three-hour address by Henry N. Speeo, of counsel for the accused man. Dr. Craig was pictured to the jury as a persecuted man, who not only could establish a reputation for clean living through the testimony of 100 witnesses, but who also could produce other witnesses to swear that he was elsewhere until a late hour at least, on the night he is alleged to have killed Dr. Keene in her apartment.

When the prosecution again resumed the aggressive and began the introduction of witnesses in support of its case, the defense met the attack boldly. The hypothesis of murder on the part of a side was pitted against the suicide theory on the other, and when the day ended there was no testimony before the jury to show by what means Dr. Keehn came to her death.

Mr. Spaeo escorted there was nothing in the relations of his client with Dr. Dr. Keehn to furnish a motive for the crime with which Craig was charged. They were warm personal friends, he said, and Dr. Craig could have had no reason for desiring the woman's death. Dr. Keehn, he pictured, was a failure in her professional life, despondent through reverses in her business career. He said that many circumstances would be introduced to sustain the probability that she took her own hand.

Four physicians testified that had been summoned to Dr. Keehn's apartments on the morning of her death and found. They described the gaping wound in the woman's throat and the slash on her left arm. The state has not yet said that the latter wound was received by Dr. Knohe in a futile effort to ward off the blow dealt by her slayer.

According to the defense's theory, the woman killed herself during the convulsion of the death struggle. On cross-examination by the state witnesses would say that the cut might not have been made in that manner.

Dr. Craig was called concerning the Kerlok and the Alaska.

History of Vessel.

Seattle, Wash.—The auxiliary boat, Mary Sachs, was purchased at Nome by Vilhjalmur Stefansson for use of the southern party of the Canadian expedition, which also has the power schooner Alaska. Dr. R. M. Anderson, commanding the southern party, is aboard the Alaska, and Kenneth Chipman, the Canadian zoologist, was placed in command of the Mary Sachs. The Mary Sachs was a gasoline schooner of 230 tons gross register. She carried a crew of three men and was built at Benicia, Cal., in 1908.

The southern party was to have made a scientific exploration of Wrangel island and Bankeland, while Stefansson on the Karlok explored the unmapped region to Beaufort sea.

U. S. TO LET ZELAYA LEAVE

Will Return to Spain and Relieve This Nation of Embarrassment.

Washington, Dec. 3.—The international tangle over the presence in the United States of A. Benino Zelaya, former president of Nicaragua, apparently was solved by Zelaya agreeing to return to Barcelona, Spain, whence he came to New York a month ago.

This agreement came as the result of a day of conference between Secretary Folk and counsel for Zelaya and the Nicaraguan government. In promising to leave the country Zelaya stipulated that he should have ample time to transact important business.

Speaking with his counsel, Gary M. Hudson, over the long distance telephone from New York, Zelaya said that his interests in New York in business did not call until Dec. 11 and that he thought he could finish his business in that time.

State department officials insist that when the deposed dictator departs he must go direct to Barcelona and that his interests be separate from politics and intrigues involving Nicaragua. This arrangement proved agreeable to Chas A. Jacobs, counsel for the Nicaraguan government.

Wants Only Car Saved.

Chicago, Dec. 4.—John McLaughlin, driving along Sheridan road, stopped his car long enough to avert a collision with a limousine that was coming in front of him, went through a guard rail and plunged into the lake shore and dropped fifteen feet into the water. McLaughlin ran to the brink. There he saw the chauffeur, perched upon the tall light of the foundered car. The latter called me: "Save from the lake. "Just pull up my car."

"Back to Africa" Invitation.

Guthrie, Okla., Dec. 4.—A formal invitation from a royal chieftan of Ashanteo, West Africa, to the negroes of Oklahoma, Kansas and Missouri, to locate in that country, is to be delivered here by Sidney Olile, a negro lawyer. Notice that Chief Albert Sam of Akim, the Ashantee, would start for America with the invitation, was received by those in charge of the "back to Africa movement." Sixty-four acres of land have been promised the American negroes by each of the 13 tribes on which to build modern cities.

Public Lands are Classified.

Washington, Dec. 3.—Secretary Lane announces that the classification of public lands as irrigable or non-irrigable in conformity with the administrative laws is being accomplished satisfactorily. The designations to date include 250,000 acres in Arizona; 5,000 in California; 18,000 in Colorado; 27,000 in Idaho; nearly 200,000 in Montana; more than 5,000 in North Dakota; 274,000 in Oregon; 5,700 in Utah; 21,000 in Washington and 83,500 in Wyoming.

STEFANSSON LOSES HIS BOAT

EXPLORER'S VESSEL CAUGHT IN THE ICE AND CRUSHED.

Men All Escape, Apparently—Instruments and Provisions All Lost, Is the Report.

Nome, Alaska, Dec. 1.—The power schooner Mary Sachs, one of the boats Vilhjalmur Stefansson's Canadian Arctic exploration expedition has been wrecked in the ice off the Arctic coast of Alaska. News of the loss of the Mary Sachs was received here in a letter from Peter Barnard, captain of the vessel.

The ice crushed the vessel into bits and all the provisions and scientific instruments observed were lost.

The letter gives no details of the mishap. As nothing is said of any lights of men on the Mary Sachs when it is believed all are safe, as they would have made their way over the ice to shore, where they could obtain shelter with the natives.

No word was received concerning the Kerlok and the Alaska.

$1,108,681,777 IS ASKED OF CONGRESS

ESTIMATES ARE $82,985,006 BELOW THOSE LAST SUBMITTED.

LIST OF APPROPRIATIONS

List of Estimates Sought Exclusive of Postoffice Needs for Fiscal Year of 1915.

Washington, Dec. 3.—Congress was asked to appropriate just $1,108,681,777 to operate the government of the United States during the fiscal year, 1915, according to the estimates prepared by each department and sent in the house by Secretary McAdoo, of the treasury.

Purpose of Vast Sum.

With this vast sum the government will maintain the battleships and forts and the armies in the states and in the countries under the secretary of war; it will keep the scales of justice balanced, endeavor to retain the friendship of foreign nations, look after domestic prosperity and seek at intervals to discover new ways in which to better health, improve living conditions and investigate the merits of the thousand new things in industry and commerce that come to its attention.

The estimates submitted are $22,487,697 in excess of the appropriations for the last fiscal year, but their total falls $39,256,005 below the estimates for that year.

List of Estimates.

Exclusive of the postoffice the estimates are as follows:

Legislative establishment, $7,633,331.

Executive establishment, $30,895,258.

Judicial establishment, $1,242,150.

Department of agriculture, $19,031,332.

Foreign intercourse, $4,447,042.

Military establishment, $105,207,647.

Naval establishments, $139,831,903.

Indian affairs, $10,268,955.

Pensions, $163,150,000.

Public works, $97,917,092.

Miscellaneous, $64,280,213.

Postoffice deficiency, including parcel post, $206,365,117.

Permanent annual appropriations, $131,191,407.

Increases for Army.

Many increases are sought for the army. Of these a large number are explained in the estimates by a statement that the army itself is larger than it has been heretofore. One is the principal millitary item, $3,000 for millitary accomodation, of which $150,000 is to be spent for fifteen companies, declared to be necessary if the United States is to keep abreast of this science and "be prepared to cope with other first class powers in case of war."

The estimates for the organized military are kept by many millions than in previous years. Some of these increases are for the former $4,404,250 for equipment of coast artillery armories, $2,100,000 for field artillery for securing work and clear ammunition for such artillery for militia are asked.

Noted Architect Dead.

New York, Dec. 1.—George Browne Post, noted architect, is dead at his home in Bernardsville, N. J., in his seventy-sixth year.

Big Rescue Mission Opened.

St. Paul, Dec. 4.—Twenty-five cities and five farm and hobos literally clothed in rags mingled freely in the big rescue mission during the delicious rescue mission during the delicious dinner given by Salvy, Okla., a negro town. Notice that Chief Albert Sam of Akim, the Ashantee, would start for America with the invitation, was received by those in charge of the "back to Africa movement." Sixty-four acres of land have been promised the American negroes by each of the 13 tribes on which to build modern cities.

WANT U. S. TO OWN RAILROADS

DECLARATION OF SUFFRAGE DELEGATES TO THAT EFFECT.

Dr. Anna Shaw Says Time Has Come for Demand of Ballot by Women.

Washington, Dec. 3.—The ownership of the railroads in the United States by the federal government was threatened in the national convention of the American Woman Suffrage association here when Miss Marie V. Smith, a delegate from New York, reported difficulty in getting reduced rail rates for delegates to the convention.

After the cheers for the declaration that the railroads should be owned by the government when women vote had subsided, Dr. Anna Shaw, president of the convention, created more cheers by declaring, "when we vote, we shall own the railroads."

Suffrage legislation has been introduced or pressed in various states this year on an unprecedented scale, according to the report of Mrs. Harry W. Dennett of New York, corresponding secretary.

Enthusiastic over reports on what already had been accomplished by the woman suffrage movement and even greater enthusiasm over prophesies of what the future will bring forth, marked the formal opening sessions yesterday of the forty-fifth annual convention of the association.

"The time is post when we see 'Please let women vote.' This has been changed to 'We demand an amendment to the federal constitution enfranchising women.'"

TORPEDO BOAT IS MISSING

Paul Jones Last During Pacific Storm —Four Others Reach Port Safely.

San Francisco, Cal., Dec. 3.—Five torpedo boat destroyers—the Paul Jones, Whipple, Stewart, Perry and Truxtun, completing a flotilla which put off Pedro Sunday morning in accordance in the Mare Island navy yard, were scattered by a terrific storm encountered Sunday night.

Now, all but the Paul Jones have been accounted for. The Whipple put into San Diego late Monday. The Perry and Stewart reached Port San Luis Obispo, while the Truxtun gained the more sheltered waters of Santa Cruz.

All of the light fighting craft suffered more or less damage. None of the vessels reported any information regarding the whereabouts of the Paul Jones.

FLETCHER REPORTS SUCCESS

U. S. Admiral Protects Foreign Interests in Mexican Oil Fields.

Washington, Dec. 3—Rear Admiral Fletcher reported to the navy department success in his last mission, which was to insure the protection of foreign interests in the oil fields near the gulf coast of Mexico without any irritating display of force.

General Aguilar, the rebel leader in the state of Vera Cruz, gave him assurances of the safety of foreign lives and property.

Huron last Wednesday night, broke in turn during the storm which swept that section of the lake Sunday. She probably will be a total loss. The crew remained aboard until hope of saving the vessel was abandoned. The tug was bound from Fort Arthur to Buffalo with 170,000 bushels of flax. The steamer Gogebic, coal laden, which grounded Saturday was released.

Supreme Court Decisions Ready.

Washington, Dec. 4.—The decisions of the supreme court in closed conference have given final touches to a number of decisions to be announced. More than 76 cases are now awaiting decision by the court, but while all of these the justices have been considering mandate a mystery. The Kentucky state rate case, the criminal oil land grant cases from California, the so-called book publishers' anti-trust suit and the intermountain rate case are those under consideration since last spring.

Pindell Will Be Renominated.

27 INCINERATED WHEN HOTEL BURNS

175 PERSONS IN BOSTON LODGING HOUSE WHEN FLAMES BREAK OUT.

FIRE ESCAPES INADEQUATE

Seventeen Injured and Two Are Dying—Two Investigations Are Begun As a Result of the Terrible Disaster.

Boston, Dec. 4.—Twenty-seven persons are known to have burned to death here when fire destroyed the Arcadia hotel in the South end. Two are dying and seventeen other are injured.

Trapped in the tiny cells and tiers of bunks in the hotel, a 16-cast lodging house, 175 men fought for their lives. Of the 175 the clerk said were in the house for the night, less than 100 have been accounted for.

Saved By Scaling Ladders.

More than fifty men were taken to the nearest police station. When the firemen arrived, thirty of these stood silhouetted against the burning furnace of the roof. Most of them were saved by the use of scaling ladders.

The five-story brick "hotel," packed tightly with tiers of sleeping men, had fire escapes only at the rear. These were woefully inadequate and could not be reached. The fire started in the lower hall and shot upward, cutting off retreat by stairway on each floor. The second floor of the building was the first one many to others on the next floor were small sleeping cells rooms, like cells, with two cots in each. A hallway ran through the center. Nearly all these occupied the rooms in the front of the building perished. The men in the rear rooms, opening on the fire escape, had locked the doors when they went to bed and were in from there escaped to reach the fire escape.

The fire was in the heart of a crowded tenement and lower class hotel district. Hundreds of occupants of adjoining buildings rushed to the street when the great quantity of apparatus called out by three alarms clanged up to their doors. Scores of excited firemen rushed into the burning hotel building and impeded the firemen in their work.

Two Investigations Begun.

Before the rules had cooled, two investigations were begun. One was undertaken by the grand jury, who viewed the scene and prepared to hear testimony regarding the manner in which owners and lessees of the property had observed the building code and fire regulations.

Now, all but the Paul Jones have been accounted for. The Whipple put into San Diego late Monday. The Perry and Stewart reached Port San Luis Obispo, while the Truxtun gained the more sheltered waters of Santa Cruz.

All of the light fighting craft suffered more or less damage. None of the vessels reported any information regarding the whereabouts of the Paul Jones.

N. D. BANKER FIGHTING DEATH

LIDGERWOOD MAN IS ALMOST SWEPT OVERBOARD.

J. H. Mouvine, Enroute Home From England, Perhaps Fatally Hurt.

New York, Dec. 4. — When the steamship Minneapolis docked after battling with rough weather all the way from Southampton, J. H. Mouvine, a wealthy banker of Lidgerwood, N. D., who was injured on Nov. 24 by being swept against the deck house by a huge wave, was rushed to a private hospital up town in the hope of saving his life.

Mr. Mouvine is suffering from three broken ribs and a fractured collar bone. It is feared that his spleen is also injured and internal. Dr. G. Bryant Daunt, the ship's surgeon, his attendant during the stormy evening spent on the Minneapolis Monday night to have a private ambulance there to meet him.

That Mr. Mouvin is still alive is due to the comradeship of two of the Atlantic transport line's seamen, Otto Leonard and John Jacobsen, who saved him from being swept from the deck and were themselves on hearing that they are still in the disabled list.

Mr. Mouvine went on the forward deck despite the warnings that it was dangerous, and when a big wave suddenly swept over the bow he was buried against the deck house. Leonard and Jacobsen rushed forward and dragged him to safety just as he was being carried overboard. When the injured banker regained consciousness several hours later he called the names of his rescuers and gave each a check for a substantial amount.

BELIEVE DESPERADO IS DEAD

No Sign in Utah Mine to Show That Mexican Slayer Survives Guess.

Bingham, Utah, Dec. 4.—Not a sound since Monday night has come from the Utah Apex mine in which Ralph Lopez, the Mexican desperado, is confined. All exits, except that in the lowest level, were sealed with smoke bulkheads and it is believed that the gas-filled mine has become the fugitive's tomb.

The tense watchfulness of seven sheriffs and more than 300 deputies for a four days' hunt has been relaxed, although the number of guards has not lessened. It is considered impossible for him to approach any of the exits without capture. One by one, the crews of miners who have stood awaiting vengeance since two of their number were killed in the underground battle Saturday, dispersed. They are satisfied that the poisonous fumes which filled the mine late the same since Monday had done their work.

Not before Friday night, it is thought, will the deputies be able to enter the mine.

"Man Only" Show As Lure.

Mexico City, Dec. 4.—Extraordinary methods are being employed here to induce men to enlist in the federal army. Savant girls display marked caution when they appear in streets as they are aware that scores of their fellow lovers have been drafted into the army as female soldiers. One trick utilized by the recruiting officers selected the federal army circulars and scripts in a single hand. The bills posted read: "The Greatest Show" and announced that the exhibition was "For men only."

Call French Cook an Artist.

New York, Dec. 4.—Mme. Milton, chef at the Ritz-Carlton hotel was the first United States grand jury for violating the contract labor law in hiring 50 cooks through agents in France. The indictment is said to be the first fruit of a government crusade against the importation of cooks, practiced by many of the big New York hotels and restaurants. The hotel men have taken the ground that a French cook is an artist and that by hiring them abroad they are not smuggling to the contract law.

No Peace In Mexico Until Dictator Is Eliminated, Says President's Message.

MONEY BILL HELPS FARMER

Need of Legislation That Will Facilitate Getting of Capital for Agricultural Purposes—Would Choose Presidential Candidates by Primary —Declares Himself for Philippine Independence—Should Let Anti-Trust Law Stand.

Washington, Dec. 2—President Wilson appeared before the joint session of the two houses of congress today and delivered his annual message as follows:

In pursuance of my constitutional duty to "give to the congress information of the state of the Union," I take the liberty of addressing you on several matters which ought, as it seems to me, particularly to engage the attention of your honorable bodies, as of all who study the welfare of the nation.

Departs From Custom.

I shall ask your indulgence if I venture to depart in some degree from the usual custom of setting before you in formal review the many matters which have engaged the attention and called for the action of the several departments of the government, of which look to them for early treatment in the future, because the list is long, very long, and would suffer in the abbreviation to which I should have to subject it. I shall submit only you the reports of the heads of the several departments, in which these subjects are set forth in careful detail, and beg that they may receive the thoughtful attention of your committees and of all members of the congress who may have the leisure to study them. Their obvious importance, as constituting the very substance of the business of the government, makes comment and emphasis on my part unnecessary.

The country, I am thankful to say, is at peace with all the world, and many happy manifestations multiply about us of a growing cordiality and sense of community of interest among the nations, foreshadowing an age of settled peace and good will. More and more readily each decade do the nations manifest their willingness to submit themselves by solemn treaty to the processes of peace, the processes of frankness and fair concession. So far the United States has stood at the front of such negotiations, and will, I earnestly hope and confidently believe, give fresh proof of her sincere adherence to the cause of international friendship in ratifying the several treaties of arbitration awaiting renewal by the senate. In addition to these, it has been the privilege of the department of state to gain the assent, in principle, of no less than 31 nations, representing four-fifths of the population of the world, to the unobjectionss of treaties by which it shall be agreed that whenever differences of interest or of policy arise which cannot be resolved by the ordinary processes of diplomacy they shall be publicly analyzed, discussed, and reported upon by a tribunal chosen by the parties before either nation determines its course of action.

There is only, one possible standard by which to determine controversies between the United States and other nations, and that is compounded of these two elements: Our own honor and our obligations to the peace of the world. A test so compounded ought easily to be made to govern both the establishment of new treaty obligations and the interpretation of those already assumed.

Mexico Has No Government.

There is but one cloud upon our horizon. That has shown itself to the south of us, and hangs over Mexico. There can be no certain prospect of peace in America until General Huerta has surrendered his usurped authority in Mexico; until it is understood on all hands, indeed, that each pretended governments will not be countenanced or dealt with by the government of the United States. We are the friends of constitutional government in America; we are more than its friends, we are its champions; because in no other way can our neighbors in whose welfare we would wish in every way to make part of our friendship, work out their own development in peace and liberty. Mexico has no government. The attempt to maintain one at the City of Mexico has broken down, and a mere military despotism has been set up which has hardly more than the semblance of a legal authority. It originated in the usurpation of Victoriano Huerta, who, after a brief attempt to play the part of constitutional president, has at last cast aside even the pretense of legal right and declared himself dictator. As a consequence, a condition of affairs now exists in Mexico which has made it doubtful whether even the most elementary and fundamental rights either of her own people or of the citizens of other countries resident within her territory can long be successfully safeguarded, and which threatens, if long continued, to impair the interests of peace, order and tolerable life in the lands immediately to the south of us. Even if the improper has succeeded in his purposes, in despite of the constitution of the republic and the rights of its people, he would have set up nothing but a precarious and hateful power, which would have lasted but a little while, and whose eventful downfall would have left the country in a worse and more intolerable condition than ever. But he has not succeeded. He has forfeited the confidence and the moral support even of those who were at one time willing to see him succeed. Little by little he has been completely isolated. His pretense of power is now evident; his promises are crumbling and the collapse is not far away. We shall not, I believe, be obliged to alter our policy of watchful waiting. And then, when the end comes, we shall hope to see constitutional order restored in distressed Mexico by the concert and energy of each of her leaders as prefer the liberty of their people to their own ambition.

Rush Currency Bill.

I turn to matters of domestic concern. You will not wish me to enter upon elaboration a bill for the reform of our system of banking and currency, which rifle country waits with impatience, as for something fundamental to the whole business life and energy of the country. I shall confine myself to a very few general suggestions, and state them in the form in which they have been most frequently pressed upon my own thought and attention. I take it for granted that the whole energy and attention of the senate be concentrated upon it till the matter is completely disposed of. And yet I feel that the request is hardly necessary, for every portion of the great house need no urging in this matter to its prompt action.

I present to you, in addition, the urgent necessity that special provision be made, alike for the immediate relief which is needed by the farmers of the country. The pending currency bill does the farmers a great service. It puts them upon an equal footing with other persons in the commercial areas that they are, as it should; and upon its passage they will be relieved of many of the difficulties which now hamper them in the use of their credit. The farmers, of course, ask and should be given no special privileges, such as are extending to them the credit of the government itself. What they need and should obtain at the present session is the right to form such associations as will make their own standard and substantial credit resources available as a foundation for joint, concerted local action in their own behalf in getting the capital they need for use. It is to this we should now address ourselves.

It has, sleguiarly enough, come to pass that we have learned of late the necessity of our farms to lag behind the other activities of the country in its development. I need not stop to tell you how fundamental to the life of the Nation is the production of its food. Our thoughts may ordinarily be concentrated upon the cities and the hives of industry, upon the centers of the crowded market place and the manufacturing districts, but it is from the quiet interspaces of the open valley and the free hill pasture that we draw the sources of life and of prosperity, from the soil and the ranch, from the forest and the mine. Without these every street would be silent and empty, every factory would close, every train would lie motionless where his products are sold. And the security is given is of a character not to be in the least affected by what is unlikely as it might be on the counter of the banks.

The Farming Interests.

The agricultural department of the government is seeking to assist as never before to make farming an efficient business, of wide co-operation of fact, in quick touch with the markets for foodstuffs. The farmers and the government will hereafter work together as real partners in this field, whom we ought to begin to see very clearly and where many intelligent plans are already being put into execution. The treasury of the United States has, by a timely and well-considered change in its practice, facilitated the moving of the crops in the autumn, when there is always the scarcity of available funds too often experienced at such times. But we must not allow ourselves to depend upon extraordinary expedients. We must add the means by which the farmer may make his credit constantly and easily available and command when he will the capital by which to support and expand his business. We are lagging behind many other great countries of the modern world in attempting to do this. Systems of rural credit have been studied and developed on the other side of the water while we left our farmers to shift for themselves in the ordinary money market. You have but to look about you in any rural district to see the result, the discouraging and embarrassment which have been put upon those who produce our food.

Conscious of this backwardness and neglect on our part, the congress recently authorized the creation of a special commission to study the various systems of rural credit which have been put into operation in Europe, and this commission is already prepared to report. Its report ought to make it easier for us to determine what methods will be best suited to our own farmers. I hope and believe that the committees of the senate and house will address themselves to this matter with the most fruitful results, and I believe that the studies and recently formed plans of the department of agriculture may be made to serve them very greatly in their work of framing appropriate and adequate legislation. It would be indirected and presumptuous in anyone to designate upon so great and unheeded a question, but I feel confident that common counsel will produce the results we must all desire.

Stop Private Monopoly.

Turn from the farm to the world of business which centers in the city and in the factory, and I think that all thoughtful observers will agree that the immediate service we owe the country and mankind is to use the means to prevent private monopoly more effectually than it has yet been prevented. I think it will be generally agreed that we should let the Sherman anti-trust law stand, unaltered, as it is, but that we should as much as possible supplement it and remove certain uncertainties of law with regard to their enterprises and investments and a clear path indicated which they can travel without anxiety. It is important that they should be relieved of embarrassment and set free to prosper so far as they can do so without should be destroyed. The ways of action should be forever wide open.

I turn to a subject which I hope can be handled promptly and without serious controversy of any kind. I mean the method of selecting nominees for the presidency of the United States I feel confident that I am not misinterpreting the wishes or the expectations of the country when I urge the prompt enactment of legislation which will provide for primary elections throughout the country at which the voters of the several parties may choose their candidates for the presidency without the intervention of nominating conventions. I venture to suggest also that this legislation should provide for the retention of party conventions, but only for the purpose of declaring and accepting the verdict of the primaries and formulating the platforms of the parties; and I suggest that such conventions should consist only of delegates chosen for the single purpose, but of the nominees for congress, the senate for vacancies in the senate of the United States, the governors whose terms have not yet closed, the national committees, and the candidates for vice presidency themselves, in order that platforms may be framed by those responsible to the people for carrying them into effect.

Obligations to Territories.

These are all matters of vital domestic concern, and besides them, others which the changed circle of our own national life in which our affections command us, and the changed conditions, there stand out our obligations toward our territories over sea. These are peculiarly our wards. Hawaii, the Philippines, are ours, once regarded as mere possessions, are no longer to be selfishly exploited; they are lands to be developed in the interest science and of serviceable and enlightened statesmanship. We must administer them for the people who live in them and with the same sense of responsibility to them as toward our own people in our domestic affairs. No doubt we shall successfully accomplish Porto Rico and the Hawaiian islands. We have already undertaken to do so to ourselves by ties of justice and affection, but the performance of our duty toward the Philippines is a more difficult and debatable matter. We can satisfy the obligations of generous justice toward the people of Porto Rico by giving them the ample and familiar rights and privileges accorded our own citizens in our own territory and our obligations toward the people of Hawaii by perfecting the provisions of self-government already granted them, but in the Philippines we must go further. We have held steadily in view their ultimate independence, and we must move toward the time of that independence as steadily as the way may be cleared and the foundations thoughtfully and permanently laid.

Acting under the authority conferred upon the president by congress, I have already accorded the people of the islands a majority in both houses of their legislative body by appointing five instead of four native members of the membership of the commission. I believe that in this way we shall make proof of their capacity in counsel and their sense of the responsibility in the exercise of political power, and that the success of this step will be such as to make it but the prelude which are to follow. Step by step we should extend and perfect the system of self-government in the islands, making test of counsel and modifying them as experience discloses their successes and their failures; that we should give them more and more the control of the native citizens of the archipelago; the essential instruments of their life, their local instrumentalities of government, their police, all of the common interests of their communities, and so by counsel and experience set up a government which all the world will see to be suitable to a people whose affairs are under their own control.

Territorial Rights for Alaska.

A duty does not less clearly lie upon us in which seems to me very pressing and very definite, to organize and develop a double duty, for it concerns both the political and the material development of the great territory of Alaska. Alaska should be given the full territorial status that other territories have had, as a storehouse, should be unlocked. Coal is not all that it contains. Those the government should itself build and administer, and the people of Alaska should be given control in the interest of all who wish to use them, but should themselves expect the control of the country and its people.

But the construction of railways is only the first step; is only thrusting open the key to the situation and throwing back the lock and opening the door. Here the pressing necessity of the country are to be exploited is another matter, to which I shall take the liberty of free to call your attention, ing your attention, for it is a policy which must be worked out very much considered steps, not upon theory, but upon facts as they are disclosed to us. It is part of our general problem of conservation. We have a free hand to develop our the resources of Alaska than in the sstates of the Union; and are the interests of the people of the same, wherever we touch it. We must see the development is not stopped or lock them up. There need be no conflict or jealousy as between state and federal authority. Each can be trusted to exercise a due care for the several parts of the great commonwealth of which they are all a part.

"JOE" BUSH IN AUTO TRAGEDY

Baseball Man's Car Accidentally Runs Down and Kills Girl Who Machine Was a Gift.

Brainerd, Minn., Nov. 28—Lostle ("Joe Bullet") Bush, driving his new six-cylinder automobile, ran down Delphin, accidentally run down and killed Louis T. Miller, aged 16, on Front street. Miller's skull was fractured and his back broken.

Bush and Miller, when he turned the corner and at a point 60 feet or three times' length of automobile state, Miller was struck as he walked across the street apparently paying no heed to the signals.

C. A. Larson, a freightcross employe, one of the first to reach the accident, says Bush was running slowly. The lights were lighted.

Miller was in the employ of the Northern Pine Lumber company. So much of the time as a section foreman and in later years as a flagman on the Nisbit railway here in Brainerd a widow and made his home with a married daughter.

Bad Shooting Affray.

St. Paul.—Paolo Bonfanti, an Italian laborer, is dead, and Peta Domaro, a fellow countryman, is in custody as the result of a shooting affray in a rooming house conducted by Domnic Collesino, another Italian. Police are searching for a man whose name is unknown to them, but who is have started the shooting. Mike Rosario was also in the house. Bonfanti only as wearing a bushy, red mustache, fired the first shot.

Carlton Denies Murder Principals.

Carlton.—Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Loveland, principals in the Portland, Ore., tragedy, were members of Carlton. They were married here by Rev. Mr. Davis on May 9, 1908. The husband was from Ft. Scott, Kan., and the bride was Josephine Strickler, of New York. Both were known well to them here. Mr. Loveland was shot and killed by his wife on Wednesday.

First of University Lectures.

Minneapolis.—The first of a course of lectures to be delivered at each of the four successive Saturdays in Clay county was given this week by Professor George S. Howard of the extension department of the state University.

Fire at Faribault.

Faribault.—The Stockbin block was damaged by a fire which started in the basement. The building is occupied by Gilbert Begg as a shoe store and Theodore Grundman as a grocery store. In the second story there were two families, who escaped with only their nightclothes. The buildings adjoining also were damaged. Walls of the fire was raging a residence owned by Mrs. Harrington. In the western part of the city was also destroyed, the financial loss being considerable.

Railroad Bridge Burns.

Glenton.—The railroad bridge a mile west of town was destroyed by fire. Cause of the fire is not known. Traffic on the branch was interrupted for several days. Trains from either end of the branch meet at the bridge.

Farmers Have Been Plowing.

Fergus Falls.—Farmers in this locality have been plowing. The lakes have been free from ice, and the frost out of the ground, making it in fine shape for plowing.

TWO PYROMANIACS CONFESS

WINGNA ARSON SUSPECTS MAKE SWORN STATEMENTS.

One Will be Charged With Firing Building in Which Persons Were Asleep.

Wilcoxa—The last and strangest chapter in the revolution of Wilcoxa's remarkable case of pyromenia, it is believed was written, when sworn statements in the form of confessions were made by Frank Norton and Ernest Cook in the presence of representatives of the state fire marshal's office and the local authorities.

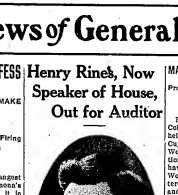
Cook, who until Tuesday, steadfastly claimed a innocence in spite of Norton's declarations and his own contradictory story, finally admitted that he, too, had set a large number of fires. In most cases, however, he said he was instructed and that Norton did the directing. Generally, he carried his story in the specific cases to the point where the match was actually applied and then endeavored to help Norton the burden of blame by declaring it was possible that "when I lit my pipe the match dropped and set the place afire."

He did not deny spreading kerosene in the offices, of having hurried away after the flames leaped, and of having, with Norton, set fire to the barn. In no case the confession reeds, did he endeavor to call the firemen.

Cook's story differed from that commending place in his confession. He declared that it was entirely upon one of the dozen fires in which he is implicated. The fire, he declared, he had replaced all details for the job, he admitted, but in no one of the instances would he admit that he actually set the fire. In these cases he thought a carelessly thrown match started the blazes.

Norton in his sworn statement told the same story he had previously related.

Norton will be charged with first degree arson and the specific complaint will be set forth that he fired the Sloda building in which persons were asleep. Cook will face a second degree charge.



Henry Rines, Now Speaker of House, Out for Auditor

In a statement announcing his candidacy, Henry Rines, present speaker of the house, says:

"The auditor's office is one of the most important positions within the gift of the people of this state, and in aspiring to this office I fully realize and appreciate its responsibilities and its important relation to public service. The auditor is the state's accountant; all claims against the state must be approved by him, and economy and strict compliance with the law in approving claims should always be his guide. My private business affairs are such that I could devote the larger part of my time to the duties of the office, and I am confident that I am in a position to give the office the attention it should have. THE CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT.

At the meeting of the Northern Minnesota Development association held at Bemidji, last week resolutions were unanimously adopted favoring amending the state constitution to make possible the use of the proceeds of public lands in reclaiming swamp lands granted to the state by the federal government, the purpose being to make possible the draining and clearing of the swamp lands and the construction of highways.

It is possible that the only way this desirable work may be accomplished is by changing the constitution to overcome the effect of the provision which prohibits the use of the proceeds of public lands in making internal improvements. Desirable as the reclamation work may be, those who have had to do with the preparation of the proposed amendments to be submitted to the people in the next election should be moved to consider the question if the proposed change is to be confined to favorable consideration. The proposition should go no farther than to make possible the use without of a sufficient amount to accomplish the reclamation work in an orderly and systematic manner. The work cannot be accomplished in a season. To improve lands much in advance of their natural occupancy would be impractical. It is not providing for a vast fund for immediate use the temptation to plunder and improvident and extravagant expenditures will be avoided.

The state of Minnesota owes much to the Old Money Bags methods imposed by the constitutional inhibition. Minnesota does not have its magnificent school fund because of the extravagance for "economy and efficiency" exhibited by the patriotic statesmen who have made and administered the laws of the state since the federal government's original grant of public lands to the state. The school fund represents enormous wealth because Old Compound Interest has been on the job all the time and for a long time.

There is such a thing as impractical economy, no doubt, but legislatures do not always practice it. But who can think of anything more desirable for the state of Minnesota than the reserve wealth represented by the state's magnificent school fund and the millions of acres of public lands? A sweeping amendment changing the whole method of handling this vast wealth and making it available for prosecution of the enterprises should not be entertained. The amendment should go "so far and no farther"—it should provide for the needed reclamation work and should stop with that. It should be specific in its terms and not general.

SERMONS AND NEWS.

"Were I to preach a sermon of great power here tonight no newspaper this side of Minneapolis would pay the slightest attention to it. But were I to turn a double-somersault on this pulpit tonight it would be heralded from one end of the country to the other under glaring headlines, and it would be telegraphed to the uttermost parts of the earth," is the statement made recently by an Aberdeen, South Dakota, preacher, Rev. J. Bosser Jones.

Mr. Jones may not know it, but he gave in that brief statement the first lesson, almost word for word, that one must learn if he would be able to determine what is news.

Powerful sermons and lofty thoughts do not have great news value, usually, because so many powerful sermons are preached and so many lofty thoughts thought every day that there is nothing out of the ordinary in their appearance. A sermon is no less important because the newspaper fails to "feature" it.

Something of little importance happens but it has news value because it is out of the ordinary and for that reason it seems to be important for the moment.

For example, if Mr. Jones had turned a double-somersault in his pulpit every "live" newspaper would have told the story of his performance. If he had accomplished the performance without getting his feet mixed up with his vestments he might have been considered enough of an athlete to have his picture in the pink section of his paper—all because his performance would have been out of the ordinary and "felt of life."

In no event is not only out of the ordinary but of importance as well it may have more than temporary news value. And so the discussion as to the determination of what constitutes news might be continued until it assumed the proportions of a long-winded sermon, the reader overcome by a feeling of drowsiness and the subject not be exhausted.

The criticism quoted above is one of the commonest heard—and one of the flattest.

Broadly speaking, the preacher's business is to preach, and the newspaper's to supply news. There are special publications whose business is the publication of religious matter to the exclusion of almost everything else and there are special publications for practically every human activity and enterprise. But the newspaper occupies quite a different field. A modern daily paper may print a sermon or two and do a little preaching on its own account and even give its readers many pages of news. People have a right to look to the papers for the news of the day. If one seeks the inspiration of a good book, he goes to the library for the book and doesn't condemn the newspaper for failing to supply the special inspiration or book. If one feels that he wants to hear a sermon he has the privilege of going to church. In the city where the daily paper is published there are at least a dozen churches for each newspaper. Is there anything the matter with a newspaper if it fails to feature a dozen sermons that people have had an opportunity of getting first hand?

The newspapers are not above criticism—some of them are decidedly yellow—but this so-called criticism, too commonly made, does not strike at their legitimate function in any effective way; rather it seems little more than the complaint of those whose ideas of the importance of their own contributions to good works lead them to believe that they are entitled to special consideration.

STAND UP STRAIGHT AND AVOID TUBERCULOSIS.

The first essential in the avoidance of tuberculosis of the lungs, or consumption, is to keep the lungs strong, so that if the germs are breathed they can do no harm.

One of the important things in keeping the lungs strong is to keep the chest wide open so that the lungs can be properly used. If the body is drooped or stoops, or if the shoulders are allowed to drag forward (round shoulder), or if the head is carried forward instead of well back over the shoulders, the chest must be flattened, the breathing must be shallow, and the lungs not being freely used, become weak. It is in this type of chest that tuberculosis usually begins. The consumptive is usually narrow-chested, with drooped shoulders and with the head crowed forward. While the development of a strong, well-formed chest is one of the most important factors in preventing tuberculosis, the same thing is to be desired if the disease has once started. Not only should we live in the open, but we should stand up straight and learn to "throw a big chest" so that the lungs can grow strong and the fresh air be taken in. The runner, the skater, or any one who is obliged to make sustained effort is taught to stand and sit with the chest high so that the lungs can be used to the best advantage, and for every one would do the same thing there would be less tuberculosis because there would be fewer weak lungs.—Journal American Medical Association.

Alexandria Post News: Governor Eberhart has recently said that he was not ready to announce himself a candidate for governor. Why not waive the formality?

Wheaton Gazette-Reporter: Dan Lawler continues to be a thorn in the side of the ruling faction of Minnesota's Democracy. He has filed for the Democratic nomination for governor. As a representation candidate, Daniel bids fair to outrival the late Ignatius Donnelly.

Itasca Iron News: The press does not look with favor on the pardon of Dr. Dumas. If Dumas committed the crimes for which he was convicted it is a disgrace to the state that he should be pardoned. If he was wrongly convicted the state is still more disgraced.

Stillwater Gazette: Down in Florida the strawberry season has just commenced. A couple carloads of berries were shipped into Chicago and only netted the relsers 75 cents a quart.

Blue Earth Post: Congressman Hammond has been down Washington until Dec. 1. It is presumed he has much to look after during the short vacation period, as it appears that not only are his cross fences becoming dilapidated, but his line fences are in the worst condition during his congressional career.

Freight Car Crushed Auto.

On Tuesday as Dr. F. H. Gambell was driving his automobile across the Soo tracks at Eighth st., his car became stalled on the track. As he was endeavoring to start up his engine to get the car off the track, a freight car which had been loosened from the engine came down the line and ran into the car smashing it up almost beyond recognition. One of the rear wheels came off, the hood and one of the lamps was smashed and the front axel broken besides many other damages being incurred. The loss to the owner was not accompanied by a man to set the brakes or the accident might have been averted as the car wasn't travelling very fast. The doctor was in the auto at the time the collision occured but as he saw the box car coming he was able to escape without injuries to himself.—Thief River Falls Times.

The new up-to-the-minute roller process of grinding feed saves you one-half of what it now costs you to feed your stock. Will grind twice as fast with same power, as the best burr or stone mill ever made and does not heat the feed. Has great capacity, very simple, grinds fine or coarse, uses little power, has no burrs or other parts to be constantly wearing out, also grinds corn-meal and graham. Will last a life-time. Made in all sizes from the smallest to the largest. Sold with or without engine. Big money in custom grinding. The Roller Mill Way is the only way.

office, and last of all State Treasurer Smith, who a lota iron mining ventures is said to have placed on each street. Adolph. If returned to his present job, will easay to succeed United States Senator Clapp two years hence and then the track will be clear. Every man I have named and then some have an interest in seeing Governor Eberhart through next year, so you see the term "white hope" is not so bad.

\+ \+ \+

State capitol gossips have been busy the past few days with the name of J. A. O. Preus, state insurance commissioner, in connection with the state auditorship. They say he is a candidate and that his promised entrance into the game is for the purpose of heading off Henry Rines of Mora, who already has filed. The impression conveyed is that itines is to be put out of business because of his unfriendly feeling toward the Eberhart administration. Mr. Preus, who was absent from St. Paul when the talk started, denied any auditorship aspirations on his return. He said he had never sought public office and he did not think he would begin at this date. Mr. Rines' candidacy does not appeal to the organization, that is certain, but down here Preus would hardly be picked as the man to oppose him. To offer him as a sacrifice would be to put one of the best managerial assets the Eberhart administration has out of business and I hardly think they have reached the suicide stage just yet. Mr. Preus is a comer and if he knows anything at all he knows that an elective office is where the best of 'em finish.

\+ \+ \+

Julius H. Block, former state treasurer and a candidate for the Republican nomination for governor in 1907, is facing trouble in a charge preferred by certain officials of the United States and Dominion insurance company to the effect that he has wrecked the concern. The matter is to be aired this month in the St. Louis county district court. Whether the charges are true or not it has to be said that Block in his time was as regular a state chief as the state had. He was a power, and when he ran for governor his possible nominee gave the Johnson administration the shivers. They worked overtime in an effort to put him out of business.

\+ \+ \+

In the graft investigation now involving the St. Paul police department some of the charges concern the legislature of 1913. They have to do with the Wallace-Possess report abatement bill and to have come to the underworld of the Capital City furnished a fund with which to corrupt that body and prevent the passage of the act. As far as the knowledge of your scribe goes it was the collection of this fund that passed the Wallace-Possess bill. Hearing of the raid on the underworld the busse leaders insisted on the passage of the act and would not even listen to an amendment for fear it would fail.

Governor Eberhart has reappointed Dr. Anna Hurd of Minneapolis, Dr. F. B. Weiser of Windom and Dr. R. D. Matchna of Minneapolis members of the state board of medical examiners. Their terms are for three years. He also reappointed Frank A. Chase of Faribault state superintendent of banks. His attorney does not intend to borrow trouble by holding jobs open until vacancies occur. The appointees of Chase undoubtedly headed off a number of rivals. It was said the opposition to his reappointment was piling up.

WHERE THERE'S A WILL

By MARY ROBERTS RINEHART

AUTHOR OF The CIRCULAR STAIRCASE, The MAN IN LOWER TEN, WHEN A MAN MARRIES

ILLUSTRATED By EDGAR BERT SMITH · COPYRIGHT BY GEORGE H. DORAN CO.

SYNOPSIS.

Minnie, sprightly house girl at Hope sanatorium, in the Adirondacks, is startled by the arrival of Miss Patty, prominent society girl reported to be engaged to marry a prince, and she dreads of the old doctor who owns the sanatorium. The estate is left to a young nephew, Dick Allen, who is about to make a career on a cattle ranch out West, when the sanatorium successfully for two years burns to the ground. On the night of Miss Patty's arrival Mr. Thornburn is found murdered in his office. Instead of the plan for a summer hotel, Pierce, a college man in hard luck, is persuaded by Dick to turn Among Dick's boarders are Mrs. Jennings, a widow, and Lake charge of the sanatorium until Carter arrives. Dick, who has fallen with Patty's younger sister, Dorothy, secretly sends for Dr. Carter, Phillips, in the old shelter house, and Dr. Stone, Harold's father, who is at the sanatorium, also arrives with Pierce to examine the management of the property. Dr. Stone is found dead in his room, apparently murdered. Dr. Carter arrives. She is acting Dicky for breach of promise.

CHAPTER VI.—Continued.

"I'm so glad you're still here, Minnie!" she exclaimed, breathing fast. "You haven't taken the dinner out to the shelter-house yet, have you?"

"Not yet," replied. "Tillie hasn't brought the basket."

But I guess her sister and Mr. Dick could have starved to death just then without her noticing. She was all excitement, for all she's mostly so cool.

"I have a note here from my sister," she said, getting it out of her pocket. "I know we all lingers to you, Minnie, but—will you take it for me? I'd go, but I'm in my slippers, and anyhow, I'd need a lantern, and that would be reckless, wouldn't it?"

"In slippers!" Mr. Pierce interrupted. "It's only five degrees above zero! Of all the foolhardy—"

Miss Patty did not seem to hear him. She gave the letter to me and followed me out on the step.

"You're a saint, Minnie," she said, leaning over and squeezing my arm. "And because you're going back and forth in the cold so much, I want you to have this—to keep."

She stopped and picked up from the snow beside the steps something soft and furry and threw it around my neck, and the next instant I knew she was giving me her chinchilla set, muff and all. I was so pleased I cried, and all the way over to the shelter-house I enjoyed and donned my prize at the same time. There's nothing like chinchilla to tone down red hair.

Well, I took the note out to the shelter-house, and popped Mr. Dick's let me in, and it struck me he wasn't an cheerful as usual. He reached out and took the muff.

"Ah," he said, "I thought that was the supper basket."

"It's cooling," I said, looking past him for Mrs. Dicky.

She had seen the note and set up and held out her hand for it. "Dick!" she said suddenly, "what do you think? Ginnie is here! Pat's to the wildest excitement. And I'm in town, and Aunt Honoria has telephoned to know what to do! Listen, he is long, of course, and registered as Oskar von Irwald. He did on awfully clever thing—came in through Canada while the papers thought he was in St. Moritz."

"For heaven's sake," replied Mr. Dick, "tell her not to ask him here. I don't know how to talk to him. Oh, I've known a lord or two, but that's different. You call them anything you like and tend them money."

"I dare say you can with Oskar, too." Mrs. Dicky put the note down and sighed. "Well, he's coming. Two days' end won't go back to town until he's had it hotter, and he's only been eleven and she's got to stay with him. And you needn't worry about what to call Oskar. He's not to know we're here."

I was worried on my way back to the sanitarium—not that the prince would make much difference, as far as I could see things being about as bad as they could be. But except of the people were talking of leaving, and since we had to have a prince it seemed a pity he wasn't coming with all his relations and titles. I would have been a good ten thousand dollars' worth of publicity for the place, and goodness knows we needed it.

When I got back to the sprighouse Miss Patty and Mr. Pierce were still there. "Of course it isn't my affair," he was saying. "You are perfectly—"

Then I opened the door and he stopped. I went on into the pantry to take off my overshoes, and as I closed the door he continued. "I didn't mean to say what I have. I meant to explain about the other night—I had a right to do that, after you forced me the issue."

"I was compelled to tell you he was coming," she said angrily. "I felt I should."

"What would you have had me do?" she asked.

"Take those two children to your father. What if there was a fire? Why should there be such a lot made of it, anyhow? They're young, but they'll get older. It isn't a crime for two people to—to love each other, is it?" And I can think a scandal or two in your family—granting your father would make a scandal—is going to put another patch on the ragged reputation of the royal family of—"

"How dare you!" she cried furiously. "How dare you!"

I heard her cross the room and fling the door open and a second later it slammed. Then I came out and Miss Patty. Mr. Pierce was sitting in his old position, elbow on knee, looking his pipe and staring at the bowl.

I had my hands full the next day. We'd had another snowstorm during the night and the trains were blocked again. About ten o'clock we got a telegram from the new doctor we'd been expecting, that he'd taken on the ice on his way to the train and broken his arm, and at eleven a delegation from the guests waited on Mr. Pierce and told him they'd have to have a house physician at once.

"We're doing the best we can," Mr. Pierce explained. "We—we expect a doctor today."

"Want?" from Mr. Jennings, who had come on a sled and was watching Mr. Pierce like a hawk.

"This afternoon, probably. As there is no one here now—"

But at that they almost fell on him and tore him to pieces. I had to step in front of him myself and say we'd have somebody there by two o'clock if we had to rob a hospital to get him.

Well, we didn't have my hands full with getting meals to the shelter-house, and trying to find a house doctor, and wondering how long it would be before "Julia" came face to face with Dick Carter somewhere or other, and trying to keep one eye on Theburn while I kept Mr. Pierce straight with the other—that day, during luncheon, Mike the bath man came out to the sprighouse and made a howl about his wages. He'd been looking surly for two days.

"What about your wages?" I snapped. "Aren't you getting what you've always had?"

"No tips!" he said sullenly. "Only a few taking baths—only one daily, and that's that man Jennings. There's no one talking. Miss Minnie, I've got to have a double percentage on that man or you'll have to muzzle him. He—he's dangerous."

"If I grant you the double percentage, will you stay?"

"I don't know but that I'd rather have the bonus before Mr. Pierce. He answered slowly, "but—I'll stay. It looks safer for me here."

Which left me thinking. I'd seen Mike talking to Miss Minnie more once lately, and he'd been going around with an air of assurance that didn't make me like it.

At four o'clock Mr. Sam came in, and I left Mr. Theburn light by the stove.

"My dear old chap," I heard him saying, "it would be as much as your life's worth. The ground je fall of holes and just now covered with snow—"

He caught my eye, and wiped his forehead.

"Heaven help us!" he said, coming over to the spring. "I found him no better in the shelter-house, except for a foot rule! Somebody's got to take him to Saranac with me. Be sure you're careful."

"What about the doctor?" I asked, reaching up his glass.

"I'm sure tonight," he answered, "on the—"

But at that minute a boy brought a telegram down and handed it to him. The new doctor was laid up with influenza.

We sat there after the others had gone, and Mr. Sam said he was for giving up the hotel, only to come on now with the truth would mean such a lot of explaining and so much money people would likely find it funny. Mr. Pierce came in later and we gave him the telegram to read. He glanced at it and handed it back.

"Let's af starving M. D.'s would jump at the chance," he said, "but if he's a specialist as all the wires say, he's to hunt. I'll tell you, Van Alstyne, there's a chap down in the depot restaurant for his arm—used to call him Doc, and I've a hazy idea that's a graduate of—Bonnie Barnes."

"Great!" cried Van Alstyne. "Let's have Barnes. You get him, will you, Pierce?"

Mr. Pierce promised and they start. set off for the depot. At the door Mr. Sam turned.

"Oh, by the way, Minnie," he called plotter gild one of your chairs and put a red cushion on it. The prince has arrived."

Well, I thought it all out that afternoon as I washed the glasses, and it made sense. I had two people in the shelter-house to food and look after like babies, with Tillie getting more and more surly day by day, and Mike she brought, and not to let him much longer; and I had a man running the sanatorium and running it to the devil as fast as he could go. Then I had a prince incognito, and I was stirring up mischief, and the sarcasta threatening to strike, and no house doctor.

Just as I got to that somebody opened the door behind me and stepped in. I glanced around, and lly was a man with the reddest hair I ever saw. Mine was pale by comparison. He was not rather short and heavy-set, and he had a pleasant face, although not handsome, his nose being slightly bent to the left. But at first all I could see was his hair.

"Good evening," he said, edging himself in. "Are you Miss Waters?"

"Yes," I said, rising and getting a glass ready.

He took off his hat and came over to the spring where I was filling his glass.

"If that's for me, you needn't bother," he said. "If it tastes as it smells, I'm not thirsty. My name's Barnes, and I was to wait here for Mr. Van Alstyne."

"Barnes!" I repeated. "Then you're the doctor!"

He grinned, and stood turning his hat around in his hands.

"Not exactly," he said. "I graduated in medicine a good many years ago, but after a year at it I took to other lines of—"

"Oh, yes," I said. "You're an actor now."

He looked thoughtful.

"Some people think I'm not," he answered, "but I'm on the stage."

I put a fresh log on the fire, and as it blazed up I saw him looking at me.

"I'm gone and little father!" he said. "Another redhead! Why, we're as alike as two carrots of the same bunch!"

In five minutes I knew how old he was, and where he was, raised, and how he got on. He wanted more than anything on earth was a little farmhouse with chickens and a cow.

I asked if he'd known what he was to do at the sanatorium and I told him as well as I could. I figured, and, when I saw Mr. Barnes at once lately, and he's been going around with an air of assurance that didn't make me like it.

At four o'clock Mr. Sam came in, and I left Mr. Theburn light by the stove.

"My dear old chap," I heard him saying, "it would be as much as your life's worth. The ground je fall of holes and just now covered with snow—"

He caught my eye, and wiped his forehead.

"Heaven help us!" he said, coming over to the spring. "I found him no better in the shelter-house, except for a foot rule! Somebody's got to take him to Saranac with me. Be sure you're careful."

"What about the doctor?" I asked, reaching up his glass.

"I'm sure tonight," he answered, "on the—"

But at that minute a boy brought a telegram down and handed it to him. The new doctor was laid up with influenza.

We sat there after the others had gone, and Mr. Sam said he was for giving up the hotel, only to come on now with the truth would mean such a lot of explaining and so much money people would likely find it funny. Mr. Pierce came in later and we gave him the telegram to read. He glanced at it and handed it back.

"Let's af starving M. D.'s would jump at the chance," he said, "but if he's a specialist as all the wires say, he's to hunt. I'll tell you, Van Alstyne, there's a chap down in the depot restaurant for his arm—used to call him Doc, and I've a hazy idea that's a graduate of—Bonnie Barnes."

"Great!" cried Van Alstyne. "Let's have Barnes. You get him, will you, Pierce?"

And Mrs. Van Alstyne came in just then, and Mr. Sam told him what I was expected to do. It wasn't much.

"Remember," Mr. Sam instructed me, as Doctor Barnes started out, "when you have time, Miss Waters, to prescribe, order a Turkish bath. The baths are to a sanatorium what the bar is to a club—they pay the bills."

Well, we got it all fixed and Doctor Barnes started out, but at the door he stopped.

"I say," he asked in an undertone, "the stork doesn't flight around here, does he?"

"Not if they see him first!" I replied grimly, and he went out.

CHAPTER VII.

It was all well enough for me to say so—I had to to Tillie many a time that it was ridiculous to make a fuss over a person for what, after all, was an accident of birth. Nevertheless, at four o'clock, after every one had gone, when I saw Miss Patty, muffled to the chin, tripping out through the snow, with Mike's man beside her, walking very straight and taking one step to Mike's two, I thought somebody had hit me at the end of my breast bone.

They came in together, laughing and talking, and, to be honest, if I hadn't caught the look of a cheat, I'm have had one foot back of the other room making a sneak course to get out of myself.

"We're late, Minnie!" Miss Patty said. "Oskar, this is one of my best friends, and you are to be very nice to Pierce!"

His had one of those single glass things we get in Europe and I could see a good stare through it. Seen close he was handsomer than Mr. Pierce, but he looked older than his picture.

"Ask her if she won't be nice to me," he said in as good English as mine and held out his hand.

"Any of Miss Patty's friends—" I began, with a lump in my throat, and gave his hand a good squeeze.

They went very soon after that. I stood and watched them until they disappeared in the snow, and I felt loneliness than ever, and sad, although certainly he was very handsome and I'd expected to find him. He was a man, and not a little cub with a body hardly big enough to carry his forefatthew's weapons. But he had a cold eye and a warm mouth, and that sort of man is generally a social success and a matrimonial failure.

I had hardly closed the door after them when it opened again and Mr. Pierce came in. He shut the door and, going over to one of the tables, put a package down on it.

"Here's the stuff you wanted for the spring, Minnie," he announced. "I suppose I can't do anything more than register a protest against it?"

"You needn't bother doing that," I answered, "unless it makes you feel better. Your authority ends at that door. Inside the sprighouse I'm in control."

"It's hard to believe, with things as they are, that I once really believed that. But I did. It was three full years later that I learned that I'd been mistaken!)

Well, he sat there and looked at nothing while I heated water in my brass kettle over the fire and dissolved the things against Thoburn's quinsy the next day, and he didn't say anything. He had a gift for keeping quiet, Mr. Pierce had. It got on my nerves after a while.

"Things are doing better," I remarked, stirring up my mixture.

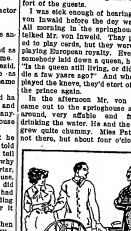
"Yes," he said, without moving. "Miss—Miss Jennings and the—you know—will have just now, weren't they? I passed them on the bridge."

"Yes."

"What—how do you like him?"

"Better than I expected and not so well as I might," I said.

Mrs. Hutchins came out to the sprighouse the next morning. She



"I've Been Looking Everywhere for That Glass."

Pierce came out. He did not sit down, but wandered around the room, not talking to anybody, but staring, wherever he looked. Once I thought he caught Mr. von Irwald's eyes fixed on him, as if he might have seen him before.

Senator Biggs was the one who really bounced the visitors. If you can think of American women, Mr. von Irwald's wife was one. Interrupting stopped playing cards and listened for the answer. As Mr. von Irwald represented the prince, wouldn't he be likely to voice the prince's opinion of American women?

It's my belief Mr. von Irwald was going on a bum steamer, for he was smiled as if he meant to, but just then he saw Mr. Pierce, and his face began sneering behind his pipe. They looked at each other steadily, and nobody but me saw the look of hatred on their faces or his sneer. After a minute the prince turned away and shrugged his shoulders, but he didn't make his remark.

"American women!" he said, turning his glass of spring water around on the table before him. "They are a mystery, of course. But they are spoiled, startling, and they have the most accents and they expect to rule their husbands. Otherwise, they are perfect, ter; we are not—what is the English?—begeisten?"

There was a sort of murmur among the men, but the women all nodded as if they thought the prince was very right. They'd have agreed with Hitler if he'd advocated starving and sitting crossegged on a mat, like the Japs, Mr. Pierce was still staring at the prince.

"What I don't quite understand, Mr. von Irwald," the Bishop put in in his nice way, "is your custom of expecting a lady to bring her husband a considerable sum of money and to place i under the husband's control. Our wealthy American girls control their money."

He was thinking of Miss Patty, she swung her foot.

The prince turned red and glared at the Bishop. Then he must have remembered that they didn't know who he was, and he smiled and started in turning the glass beside.

"Ah, yes," he said, "it is not better? What do women know of money? They throw it away on clothes, dress, jewels —American women are extravagant. It is one result of their—of their spoiling."

Mr. Pierce got up and emptied his pipe into the fire. Then he turned.

"I'm afraid you have not known the best type of American women," he said, looking at the prince. "Our representative women are our middle-class women. They do not control European alliances, not having sufficient money to attract the attention of the nobility, or enough to buy titles, so they do prairie, for the purpose of adornment."

Mr. von Irwald got up, and his face was red. He looked angry and unsneering.

"Also," he went on, "when they marry they wish to control their own money, and not see it spent in—ways with which they are forbidden to meddle."

We were all paralyzed. Nobody moved. Mr. Pierce put his pipe in his pocket and stalked out, slamming the door. Then he von Irwald shrugged his shoulders and laughed.

"I see I shall have to talk to our young friend," he said and picked up his glass. "I'm afraid I've given a wrong impression. I like the American women very much; too well," he went on with a look at Dorothy, "to see Carter getting shabby. I saw him go out as I started down the path."

I was still nervous when I put on my shawl and picked up the basket, but there was a puddle on the floor and the soup had spilled. There was nothing for it but to go back for more soup. And I got it from the kitchen without the chef seeing me. When I opened the door and looked once again Mr. Pierce was by the fire, and in front of him, where I left the basket, lay a dead rabbit. I was quite sure it hadn't been there.

"Well," I asked, "did you change my basket like that dead rabbit?"

"Basket!" he said, looking up. "What basket?"

I looked everywhere, but the basket was gone, and after a while I decided that Mr. Pierce had been absent-mindedly thoughtfulness (or hunger) and had carried it off.

And all the time I looked for the basket Mr. Pierce sat with his gun across his knees and stared at the rabbit.

"I'd thank you to take that messy thing out of here," I told him.

"Poor little thing!" he exclaimed. "He was playing in the snow, and I killed him—not because I wanted food or sport, Minnie, but—well, because I had to kill something."

"I hope you don't have those attacks often," I said. He looked at the rabbit and sighed.

"Never in my life!" he answered. "For that or any other difference, but I—blood-lust!" He got up and put the gun in the corner, and I saw he looked very tired indeed.

"It didn't like to scold him when he was just back from the war, but business is business. So I asked him how long he thought people would stay if he acted as he had that day. I told him, too, that sometimes he wasn't responsible for the morals of the patients or the guests, only for their health.

He was sitting and kicked a chair. "Health! Why, if I wanted to keep a good dog in condition, Minnie, I wouldn't bring him here."

"Oh," I retorted, tired shut him in an old out oven, and give him a shot of ether, and he'd come out in three days friskier than puppy. Then he'd start do that with people.

"Is that what Mr. von Irwald goes." I went on, "that's not your affair or mine. If Miss Patty's own relations can't prevent it, why should you worry about it?"

"Precisely," he agreed. "Why should I? But I do, Minnie—that's the devil of it."

He said good night and went out, walking like one of the rabbit with pain, and I went into the pantry to finish straightening things for the night. In a few minutes it burst open and Mike rushed in, one Mr. Pierce's, and ons with a strong Celtic accent.

"When was that?" Mr. von Irwald's voice.

"A year ago, in Vienna."

"Where?"

"At the Bal Tabarin. You were in a box. Once I was with told me who the women was. It was she, I think, who suggested that you lean over the rail—"

"Ah, so!" said Mr. von Irwald as if he just remembered. "Ah, yes. I recall

FIRST TO TALK PHRENOLOGY

Theory Had Its inception Through Dr. Gall, a Practicing Physician of Austria.

The first public notice of the "Father of Phrenology" appeared in Gall and's "Dutch Mercury" 116 years ago, June 14, 1798, the New York American states.

Gall was a practicing physician of Vienna chiefly in the career he had become a firm believer in the idea that the talents and disposition of man are dependent upon the functions of brain and the distribution of that may be inferred with perfect exactitude and prostaion from the external appearance of the skull.

Gall was sp ahin man; he set forth his views in a graphic, concise manner, and in a very brief period he had all Europe at the top notch of excitement. His views created like wildfire, and in all grades of society people were discussing the probable truth of discoveries." The new theory had to meet with contemporary opposition from the ostedians of truth and the preservers of morality, but the opposition only increased the popularity of the theory, and Gall's celebrity increased by leaps and bounds. His lectures were interdicted, and he was threatened with the direst penalties unless he ceased his "immoral and atheistical" teachings; but he kept right on making converts, among all the large towns of Germany and the continent, and by 1805 all of Europe was discussing the phrenological theory.

In 1828, the year of Gall's death, phrenology was in vogue everywhere. But after a great and glorious flood, the popularity of began to wane, and today it is seldom heard of.

It is not meant that phrenology was altogether a failure. It never had a good purpose in its day. There was a time when it was a terrible mania of truth, and against which it is foolish to try to protest. In the natural philosophy of the time to come there will be a more favorable mention of the work that was done by Franz Joseph Gall, the father of phrenology.

RESTRICT RELIGION

Liberty of Christian Seots Curtailed in Macedonia.

Less Freedom Allowed Now Than There Was Under the Moslem Rule —Newspaper Favors Military Invasion to Restore Sway.

London.—The Reken notes what others have also observed, that there is less religious liberty in Macedonia now among the Christian sects than there was under Moslem rule, and it favors a military invasion of Macedonia to restore the sway of the Moslem crescent. It says:

"The Balkan war was to have liberated the various races from galling servitude. It has not so resulted. It has rather resulted in the loss of the rights those races held under Ottoman rule, when the government recognized the religious and civil officers who were freely chosen by the several Christian communities. But the various elements of the population that have fallen into the hands of the Greek School at Allstrati, Burned by the Bulgarians.

From "A Journey in Northern Macedonia," Published by Methuen, London.

Balkan governments now possesse the rights they formerly enjoyed. It is therefore natural that they should, all along, the distribution of rece or religion, desire autonomy and independence, sovereignty. This defines the present duty of the Christian state, to go forward relying on her military strength and establish Macedonian autonomy. The Greeks have no right to remain in Kavala, or in Salonika, the capital of the new municipality. The Christian army should advance beyond Salonika, to Hasonna, and enter Thessaly, and cancel the claims of the Greeks over the islands also. The erection of Macedonia into an autonomous principality would serve the interests of Christianity and the real peoples of Europe, and make possible a real balance of power in the Balkans, and stop the present state of affairs."

THE VENGEANCE OF OUTLAWS

Band of Desperadoes Wipe Out Every Member of Posse Giving Family But One.

Milan—A band of outlaws has created a dreadful vengeance on a well-to-do Sicilian family named Calcagero, who lived at Favara, near Palermo.

Several months ago the brigands suspected the family of acting as spies for the police and plotting to have them captured while entertaining them to dinner. The outlaws accordingly sent Signor Calcagaro a black-edged missive warning him that the whole family would be wiped out before the end of the month.

On June 8 the father, mother and seven children were killed by a band of brigands, who left only a boy of ten, who escaped by hiding in a haystack, with a few nights ago the brigands had visited the house.

The only surviving member of the family is a married brother, with two children, living at Favara.

BEAR STEALS ARMY MEAT

Animal Gets Yellowstone National Park Soldiers' Rations by Acrobatic Feats.

Washington.—The war department has allowed the soldiers of Troop I, First United States cavalry, stationed in the Yellowstone National park, $10.80 for bear soldier's rations. The department at first refused to allow the claim, but when it presented upon receipt of details of the theft, account for particulars, Col. L. M. Butts, in charge of the park, explained that his men had taken every precaution to save the rations from the bears, but were outwitted. A frame storehouse was erected, and the meat was suspended in middair by wires attached to four trees forming a square. No corner of the frame was within ten feet of any tree. To get meat for meals bears need a ladder.

One bear climbed one of the trees, went out on a limb, let himself down the meat, dropped on it and bore it to the ground.

Grave Held Petrified Man.

Baltimore, Md.—After laying in a grave for more than nine years, the body of Patrick Dugan, who found in his home completely petrified. Its weight was estimated at more than 500 pounds. The face and hands were a light gray, while the clothes were several shades darker. The body was reinterred in another cemetery. Dugan was eighty-four years old when he died.

Sneers Causes Woman's Death.

Calgary, Alb.—During an aerial act here, John Bartlett, a young man hung by his knees from a trapeze, while a woman assistant, hanging at the end of a strap gripped in Bartlett's teeth, spun dizzily in mid-air. Unconsciously Bartlett sneered, and the woman dropped 50 feet, alighting in the orchestra pit. A hairpin was driven into her skull, inflicting a fatal injury.

BIRD THAT FIGHTS BURROWING PESTS

THE WRESTLERS CROUCHED LOW

The shrill spinedid bird is undoubtedly the most powerful hawk met with in Montana, where it is usually called eagle, and its carrying power is remarkable, as the report will show. It does no harm, but, on the contrary, wages unceasing warfare against such pests as prairie dogs, gophers and ground squirrels, and should, therefore, be universally protected; nevertheless it has unfortunately become very scarce, excepting in one or two favored localities, where it is strictly preserved. Although a good deal has been written about the burrowing rough-leg (Archibuteo ferrugineus), I am not aware that it has hitherto been studied or photographed at the nest. Last summer Mr. W. R. Felton kept four nests of this hawk under observation for me, and visited them whenever his work allowed of time, writes E. S. Cameron in Country Life. These four nests were within a radius of four miles from Mr. Felton's headquarters at the Square Butte ranch in Chouteau county, and others were reported seven miles away. Besides the above, Mr. Felton found four disused, but well preserved, aeries—two of them within a quarter of a mile of an occupied nest. All eight nests were placed upon rocky ledges or points. They were constructed of the same materials, which consisted of sticks, sage and grease-wood, lined with some coagwood intermixed, and lined with dry cow dung. As will be seen from the measurements, the loose pile of sticks made the nests occets remarkably high, but they settled considerably before the young had flown. A brief history of one of these nests condensed from Mr. Felton's notes is as follows: The nest was only two miles north of the Square Butte ranch, easily visible from there through powerful binoculars, and was visited almost every day. This particular nest was picturesquely situated on a rocky point of the "Chalk Cliffs" overlooking a valley geologically famous "Square Butte," which, despite its modest name, is an immense rock eminence rising on isolated spur of the Highwood mountains, 2,500 feet above the prairie. In reality the so-called "Chalk Cliffs" consist of a stratum of white sandstone, chiefly in the center of a range of grass-covered hills whose green summits rise in strong contrast above the white corrugated rocks. This sandstone stratum has been worn into a series of perpendicular cliffs, pure white above, but stained light brown below by lignitic matter, and fantastic spurs are carved into the castellic pinnacles and mounds. One promontory in particular is a regular sawtooth ridge. The nest here shown is poised upon the spur of a pillar which terminates a knife-blade projection 2,575 feet high, and suggests to some photographs the prow of a ship. As there is a sheer vertical descent on to the valley, and the nearest of the connecting ridges suddenly breaks off, leaving a wide fissure in the rock between it and the nest, it is a task of no small difficulty to reach the latter and one best solved to a sailor or a cat. It can only be accomplished by approaching the eyrie from above, and then crawling along the ledge, when, by dropping into and straddling the gap (which is well shown in the photograph), the nest can be obtained. Mr. Felton, making light of the danger, climbed frequently to the nest, and made numerous exposures with a small camera at the range of a few feet. The nest was four feet in height and three and a half feet in diameter, and was higher than any Montana eyries of the golden eagle known to me, which species has also nested in the "Chalk Cliffs." (In his recently published "History of the Birds of Colorado," Mr. W. L. Sclater mentions a golden eagle's nest which measured "six feet in diameter and nine feet high.") The hawks carried green alfalfa to the nest for decorative purposes, and Mr. Felton noticed a fresh supply there on three separate occasions. When found on June 18 the eyrie contained three newly hatched young, but only two reached maturity, as one of the nestlings disappeared on July 9 when fifty-two days old. Mr. Felton conjectured that it had been blown out of the nest by a violent thunderstorm, but the two stronger birds might have ejected their weaker brother. In any event, the outcast would soon have been picked up by some four-footed or winged marauder. The two remaining fledglings permanently left their nest on July 19, when about nine weeks old. While watching at this nest, at two o'clock one afternoon, Mr. Felton observed a great horned owl flying along the cliffs close to an eastern pinnacle. This owl passed close to the nestlings, when one of the soaring hawks, presumably the female, made a soo to swoop at and strike the interloper, which threatened great obligauty to the ground. The hawk made two more dashes at the sitting owl, and a short squabble ensued each time between the birds; but when Mr. Felton reached the place the owl was nowhere to be seen, and the hawk had returned to her nestlings. As the great horned owl is a powerful and ferocious bird, which even attacks and eats large hawks (see Fitcher, "Hawks and Owls of the United States," page 175), it undoubtedly beat off its assailant without difficulty. So far as I have observed in eastern Montana, the ferruginous rough-leg feeds chiefly upon prairie dogs and meadow mice, though not averse to snakes. In my opinion it never takes frogs. Like golden eagles, these hawks often hunt unsteadily in pairs, and then appear to be more courageous, attacking mammals as large as jackrabbits. Mr. Felton made many valuable observations on the food habits of these hawks during the nesting season, and discovered the fact, new to science, that they prey upon birds as well as mammals. Over the whole course of his observations until the young birds had flown, prairie dogs were found largely to exceed all other diet, but until the nestlings were about two weeks old, their food consisted partly of meadowlarks (Sturnella neglecta). While very little food was found in the nest, taking into consideration the prey-remains paid to it, there were seen altogether nine prairie dogs, one cotton-tail rabbit, two mill snakes (one 31 inches long) and seven remains of sharp-tailed grouse and meadowlarks. On two separate occasions, Mr. Felton states, when near the eyrie, the wary female frequently passed and repassed overhead with a meadowlark in her talons, as subsequently identified. The bill of fare at all four eyries was similar, and meadowlarks, as demonstrated by their feers and feathers, were provided for the nestlings. The following interesting collection of remains was seen at one nest: Four prairie dog skulls, the skeletons of two mill snakes (one of them being very large), the leg of a sharp-tailed grouse, the wing and scapulars of a magpie and the primaries of a meadowlark. Grouse and magpie remains were not found until July 17 and 21, and were proved by the feathers to belong to young birds. To the best of my knowledge, this species never attempts to take poultry of any kind, and my own observations are strongly confirmed by Mr. W. P. Sullivan, for 16 years manager of Mr. Milner's beautiful Square Butte ranch, where these hawks have always been protected on account of the numerous gophers (Thomomys) which they destroy. As above narrated, several pair breed annually upon the ranch, and are constantly flying around the buildings, yet no chickens have ever been molested. Mr. Sullivan, who is a close observer of nature, considers that, after the young can fly in the fall, these hawks subsist chiefly upon gophers, and he has described to me their mode of capturing them as follows: "I have watched the hawks often through glasses in our alfalfa field after the first crop has been taken off. The pocket gophers get pretty busy tunneling, and pushing all the loose dirt clump earth up in piles on the surface. The hawks fly slowly over the field until they discover a fresh pile of earth. Here they will alight softly, and wait for the gopher to push close to the surface. They will then spread their wings and, rising a few feet in the air, come down sitting upon the loose earth, when the gopher is transfixed and brought out. I have seen them eat the gopher where caught, and at other times carry it away."

In the summer of 1903 about an acre of ground at the Square Butte ranch was covered with piles of building material, such as lumber, posts and forty shed timbers, which had been collected there the previous year. Numbers of cotton-tail rabbits lived under these piles, and provided an occasional meal, both for the hawks and for the ranch cat, which was a female tabby. On a warm day in June (one of the ranch) happened to be engaged in conversation with Mr. Sullivan near a pile of posts, upon which the cat was basking in the sun with one eye open for a chance rabbit, as usual. A ferruginous rough-leg, with nestlings in the white cliffs, was spraining low over the buildings, but neither the gentlemen nor the cat took particular notice of the familiar sight. Both men were, however, suddenly startled by a loud whirring noise, when to their intense surprise they saw that the hawk had lifted the new log widened and struggling cat from her couch on the posts and was slowly bearing her aloft. It seemed at first to the astonished spectators as though the hawk would actually succeed in disposing of this troublesome quarry, since it continued to rise easily with its burden to a height of about 25 feet. By this time, however, the fully-aroused victim was stirred to a desperate effort, and it became clear that the audacious hawk had "bitten off more than it could chew." In Mr. Sullivan's words, the tabby "twisted round, gave a terrible spitfair and scream, and clawed the hawk with a vengeance." The latter, flopping wildly, at once released its grip, while puss, nothing loth, withdrew her claws, fell to the ground and dashed under the posts. Numerous downy feathers floating gently to the ground convinced the onlookers that the chagrined hawk had none the best of the encounter. Frequently fond of cats, it now soared to a great height, and returned with empty talons to the "chalk cliffs." The cat in question was a very small one, and Montana cats are notably fine specimens, so that allowing for these facts, the victim must have weighed six pounds at least. Nevertheless, Mr. Sullivan feels sure that the cat believed that the rabbit for which she was mistaken, the hawk would successfully have conveyed the quarry to its eyrie in the rocks. As the nest was two miles distant this would seem an extraordinary feat, and presumably transcend any hitherto published records of the kind. I quite admit that under favorable conditions of wind the female hawk might transport a five or six-pound jackrabbit to his eyrie; but that any existing hawk should ever surpass what this one achieved seems to me unthinkable. The dexterous application of the cat's hind claws would still to prove to it as in the above remarkable instance. Where a rabbit succumbs to the shock of the hawk's constricting grip, the agile and wiry feline, on the other hand, is stimulated to offer a keener ate resistance, and, like Mr. Sullivan's protege, is little the worse for the encounter. It cannot be told whether the hawk was mistrustful of rabbits after this event, but the cat became so suspicious of a Young other that she would not touch the wood pile if Mr. Sullivan threw his hat into the air.

A Thoughtful Wife

"Where's my new mesrchaum pipe?" asked Mr. Cumso, after dinner. "Where's my new cigaremants, hack of the clock, when I quit smoking last night."

"Didn't I hear you say that it would take a long time to color that pipe, dear?" asked Mrs. Cumso.

"It is quite likely you did. The operation can not be performed all at once. But where is the pipe?"

"You know how anxious I am to save you all the work I can, dear?"

"Yes, just like the precious little woman you are; but what has that to do with my pipe?"

"Just this, love. I got to worrying over the long time it would take you to get it colored, and I wondered if I couldn't help you a bit."

"What! You don't mean to say you have been smoking the pipe yourself?"

"Oh, no! But a poor tramp came to the house this morning. He was smoking the forlornest little bit of a pipe, and——"

"Go on!" commanded Mr. Cumso in a concentrated voice, trying to keep calm. "You have made him a present of my mesrchaum, I suppose!"

"Oh, no! Your dear wife isn't built that way, as all that."

"Then what has the tramp to do with the pipe?"

"Don't be impatient, dear, and I'll tell you. I remembered what you said about the long time it would take you to color it, and so I asked the man if he would smoke it all day for a dollar. He said no; that a dollar and a quarter was the least he could do it for. So I told him I'd pay him that. He's out in the back yard now, working hard, and he really seems to enjoy it. Yet some people say that tramps can't be induced to work. But where are you going, love? Not downtown so early, are you? Now I wonder what's made that man so cross?" she added, as her husband slammed the door.—Puck.

NUTMEG AS A PROPHYLACTIC

Many Englishmen Are Taking Up an Ancient Old American Rheumatism Preventive.

London.—An extraordinary alleged "cure" for rheumatism is being talked of here. The cult of nutmeg carrying as a sort of charm against the disease has increased rapidly of late.

"For a good many years," writes a correspondent to the Daily Mirror, "a few people have been carrying nutmegs as a kind of protective against rheumatism, and now many others are following their example. Consequently there has been an increased demand for nutmegs, although the price of them has not gone up so far. Those who have adopted the cult declare that, however severely they suffered from rheumatism before, all traces of the troubles ceased as soon as they began to wear the 'charm,' and that they never have any recurrence of the complaint so long as they continue to carry a nutmeg on their person. Some have the nut attached to the watch chain by a gold clasp and keep it constantly in the watch pocket; others it bent leather receptacles, which are being made for this exprose purpose by a London Bond street shops.

"Women—and there are many who have caught the nutmeg-wearing craze—often have the aromatic charm fixed in a gold or platinum claw and suspended by a fine chain from the waist or garter."

A Church of England dignitary who has worn a nutmeg for many years said that the belief in the efficiency of the nut in warding off rheumatism was no mere superstition. He attributed its power to the combining properties of the oils contained in the kernel—properties which from time immemorial have been known to the natives of the Benda Islands, whence comes nutmegs.

A London doctor was very skeptical. "Rheumatism is an old trade secret," he said. It is absurd to imagine that by carrying a nutmeg you can ward off rheumatism. The weight of a nut carry s stone and put your belief in that. Still, the nutmeg has certain properties as an antidote to rheumatism. Here with me, its essential oils make a liniment that I have known used with success in what is called typical acute rheumatism—a form of tropical rheumatism."

The representative of a firm of spice merchants said that he had heard of the belief in the nutmeg "antidote." "As a matter of fact," he said, "a leading member of our firm carries a nutmeg about with him and swears by it as a 'warder-off' of rheumatism."

No New Englander needs to be reminded that the nutmeg as a remedy and then prophylactic has been venerated for centuries in the Eastern United States.

ONE OF FREAKS OF NATURE

Stick-Insect Passes Into a State of Catalepsy Instead of Slumber During Daylight Hours.

London.—Professor Schmidt of the Imperial university of St. Petersburg has been experimenting with a species of Phasmid, or "stick-insect." As a result of his investigations he has discovered that these insects pass daily into a state of catalepsy, or trance, and that they do not merely "pretend," as recently inadvertively quoconcent, during the hours of daylight as has been supposed. The photographs show the normal pose of the stick-insect when in a cataleptical state, and some of the extraordinary postures which Professor Schmidt finds the creatures assume. They remained in these abnormal positions without movement of any kind, for periods one to four and half hours, and when their catalepsy passed, they showed no signs of muscular fatigue. It should be added that these stick-insects feed at night, on the foliage of various trees and shrubs, by contrast pinching with forceps, or by electric shocks from an induction coil.

In an Abnormal Position During a Trance; a Stick-Insect Standing on Its Head; a Position for Four and a Half Hours.

BEE STINGS HALT WEDDING

Missionaryl Bridegroom Requires Medical Treatment Just Before the Ceremony.

Mizelle, Miss.—Dr. H. H. Cranford, while preparing for his wedding, hitched his horse too near some bee hives. The bees attacked the horse, and in unhitching the animal, Doctor Cranford was so severely stung that he became unconscious. The horse wrecked the buggy and probably will die. Doctor Cranford was revived by fellow physicians and his marriage with Miss Lena Miller took place about an hour late.

Doctor Cranford is treasurer of the town and surgeon-physician for the New Orleans Northeastern railroad.

PRESERVE FEEDING VALUE OF CORN CROP

The silo affords a means of preserving the crop. Fine barns and are not absolutely necessary additions to the modern farm.

(By W. MILTON KELLY.)

The corn crop occupies the foremost place in American farming. A good crop of corn means a fitting finish of a prosperous season. We raise corn in abundance. But we fail far short in preserving the crop in a manner to secure its full feeding value. We save more feed from it than from any other crop, and we waste more. At least 40 per cent of the nutritive materials are wasted in the stalk field, or nearly one inch of it are contained in the whole wheat crop. The shock and the silo should be used to preserve this feed. On many farms the feeding operations have not reached a stage when all the feeding value of the crop can be utilized, but in this season of high prices for hay, every effort should be made to derive the full feeding value from the fodder and ensilage. In the eastern states farmers have the settled policy of saving all the corse feed from the corn crop. As the corn belt states reach an agricultural maturity they will come to it. Many of the best feeders now building silos and buying huskers and shredders for doing so. The only excuse for the cutting and storing of the extra feed.

The silo affords a means of preserving a certain portion of the crop that does not reach full maturity, and the work of filling can be done, even where labor is scarce, without interfering with the work of securing the grain crop. Corn is ready for the silo before it can be shocked to advantage. Between the period and the time the corn is fit to crib there is two or three weeks time in which profitably be devoted to putting the crop into shocks. On every farm where stock is kept the silo and corn-shock should be given a large portion of the crop before frost comes, and the crib should get none until a few sharp frosts have withdrawn the sap from the corn. No other grain crop can have its harvest season extended so advantageously over so many weeks. This should encourage every farmer to save all of his crop. Every acre put into the silo and shock will keep in good condition until the remainder of the crop has been cribbed. A few days of favorable husking time may be a valuable lesson in the end, for it will help to stimulate greater efforts than have ever been put forth to preserve more of the ear corn for feeding.

It will pay every farmer to own or have an interest in,as engine and ensilage cutter and a husker and shredder, just for filling silos and husking and shredding the shock corn. Corn is best for ensilage before it is hard by ripe enough for the shock. In other words, when the grains are glazed and denied and the husks and lower blades are turning yellow. The corn binder is a great labor saver in cutting corn for ensilage and the shock. It not only saves the standing stalks of corn, but the bundles are easier to handle. Although the silo adds great-

MAKING FLOUR FROM BEETS IN FRANCE

A Wonderful Field of Beets.

An entirely new use, and one that may in time become very important, has been discovered for sugar beets—that of flour making. This has been accomplished in considerable quantities at Clermont in France, where an immense dryer has been built for the purpose, according to consular reports.

The first part of the process consists in chopping up the beets and drying the water out of them. Beets contain 73 per cent of water, nearly all of which is removed by evaporation. By this means 100 pounds of dry material is obtained from 500 pounds of beets. This dry material contains more than 70 per cent. of sugar, and therefore on being ground to a fine meal is exceedingly sweet and adapted to the making of cakes and puddings.

The sugar in beet flour is estimated to contain nourishing like 82 per cent. of pure nutriment.

FOUND A NEW INDIAN TRIBE.

Explorer Has Strange Tale to Tell of His Discoveries Along the Amazon.

Albert Lang, who is exploring the sources of the Amazon for the Brazilian government, has informed F. N. Dalinchaigh, secretary of the Explorers' club, of the discovery of a new tribe of Indians 1,000 miles above Santiatain, between the headwaters of the Calrary and Mojo rivers. Mr. Lang gives a picturesque description of the savages, who, he says, took him for a god, endowing his feet to show their devotion. Their tools, he writes, are stone, and their ideas as unusual as to suggest their belonging to another age. The Jewish cast of their features might lead one to infer that they were of the lost tribes did not their ignorance of iron and writing argue against it.

"They are a sting in a maloa (hut)," writes Mr. Lang, "of a curious tribe of genuine savages, arriving here after taking my sleeman canoe above the headwaters of the Calrary and Mojo rivers, fighting our way through five dangerous rapids to get here. After fifteen days' search I got in touch with a virgin tribe, which can be so described because they are wholly untouched and unspoiled by civilization. They use stone axes and by their aid have cleared away some 80 acres of jungle, and so blunt are these tools that the trees look as if they had been chewed off.

"They grow cotton and yet go wholly nude, only women wearing waistbands. I was received hospitably and carefully watched, and they embrace me frequently and give me bad whisky. I am here to look up the indigenous tribes for the government of Brazil and ascertain their possibilities and the best means of entering into relations with them. They are, like big, savage children, kind, but suspicious. Some of the men have fiendish looks turns. They show great skill with the bow and arrow, some of the former measuring 8 feet."

SKIM MILK OF VALUE FOR THE POULTRY

Very Good for Fowls, Either Sweet or Sour—Good Substitute for Meat Scraps.

Very few people understand the value of skim milk as a food for poultry. They relish it, and it is very good for them, either sweet or sour, or buttermilk. If it is not too old.

It is a valuable aid to meat-scraps to a certain extent. In fact, the feeding to stimulate greater efforts than have ever been put forth to preserve more of the ear corn for feeding.

It will pay every farmer to own or have an interest in,an engine and ensilage cutter and a husker and shredder, just for filling silos and husking and shredding the shock corn. DISEASES OF THE FOOT

Disinfecting Cow Stables.

Disinfectants cannot destroy germs if they do not come into direct contact with them. Disinfectants should be applied in sufficient quantity to thoroughly saturate the surfaces, after the adhering particles of dirt are removed. In the application of the disinfectant in cow stables it is well to use a brown or stiff brush and thoroughly scrub the flood, feed troughs, stanchions and lower parts of the walls.

The solution can be applied to the ceilings and upper parts of the side walls with a spray pump and must be carried into any crevice and recess into which dirt can enter.

Keep Nests Clean.

Keeping the nests and the poultry houses clean means work, of course, but how can one hope to succeed in any business without work.

Two Extremes.

Hens suffer from over-feeding as much as from half starving.

RED LAKE FALLS, RED LAKE COUNTY, MINNESOTA, THURSDAY, DECEMBER 18, 1913. VOL. XXXI—No. 12.

WHITE WAY FOR RED LAKE FALLS

PLAN TO PUT TWENTY-FIVE OR THIRTY LIGHTS ON MAIN STREET.

"CHARITY BALL" PROPOSED AS A STARTER FOR WHITE WAY FUND.

A "white way" for the principal business street of the city is an improvement that is almost sure to come in the near future. Plans for the improvement have been in the air for some time.

It is proposed to put six posts to a block on Main street, beginning at a point near the court house and existing several blocks south.

If the improvement is made incandescent bulbs will be substituted for the arc lamps in use on Main street and by making that change it is believed that the "white way" could be installed at little if any additional cost to the city. Ornamental posts with cluster globe lights will be used for the "white way."

It is proposed to finance this big improvement in the lighting system of the city by calling for the co-operative effort of the public spirited citizens. A big "white way" ball is to be given soon. The tickets for the ball will be five dollars—the price will be the same whether you dance or not—and every "good fellow" in town will be expected to buy. Just a little of the right kind of co-operative effort and the "white way" will be here on a standing and permanent of the public spirited enterprise of the citizens of Red Lake Falls.

EDGAR ELBERT FLETCHER.

Edgar Elbert Fletcher, accountant of whose death was made in the last issue of the Gazette, was born at Feather Falls, Laurence County, New York, Jan. 7, 1840, and, consequently, would have been 68 years of age had he lived until the fifth of next January.

Mr. Fletcher came west in 1882 and lived for a Minneapolis Lake before he lived at Moorhead. Mr. Fletcher was one of the pioneers of Red Lake Falls, for he came here twenty-five years ago and had since resided here.

In January, 1877, Mr. Fletcher and Miss Nellie D. Van Dozen were married at Smith Falls, Ontario. There have been eight children, six of whom are living. One daughter died in the city twenty years ago and one son, Abner, died a few years ago. The surviving children are Mrs. W. A. McIntyre of Langdon, N. Dak., Mrs. Wm. Anderson of Fergus Falls, Miles Lou Fletcher and Miss Mildred Fletcher of this city, Dr. F. F. Fletcher of Grand Forks and Ernest Fletcher of Langdon.

The funeral was held at the home at 1:30 o'clock Saturday afternoon, Rev. David V. Richardson officiating, and was attended by many old friends by whom Mr. Fletcher was held in high esteem.

Annual Meeting.

The annual meeting of the Brug Funeral Home Association will be at Pennington and Red Lake counties will be held in the city of Bullhead on Monday, the 5th day of January, 1914, beginning at 2 o'clock p. m., to elect officers for the coming year and to transact other business that may come before the meeting.

STORES OPEN EVENINGS.

This for Accommodation of the Christmas Shopper.

For the accommodation of Christmas shoppers the stores of the city will be open evenings until Christmas.

MAKE CHRISTMAS FIRES IMPOSSIBLE

UNUSUAL PRECAUTIONS SHOULD BE TAKEN TO PREVENT LOSSES.

Carelessness at Christmas time increases danger to life and property. The rapidly approaching Christmas season brings grave fire hazards with it. The flimsy materials used in store decorations are of a highly inflammable nature, usually in close proximity to kerosene, gas, acetylene electric and other lights. Electric lights properly safe-guarded are the ideal light for decorative purposes but improper handling makes them a decided fire menace. Electric bulbs should never be wrapped in tissue paper or cloth, for colored effects, as the heat from a light of small candle will ignite if kept in contact with the wrappings for a short time.

The average Christmas tree offers unusual opportunities for a terrible holocaust as the tree and trimmings lighted with gaily-colored candles, a veritable death trap. Churches, halls and school houses where parties and entertainments are held should be pocked to enforcement and in many instances the halls and other rooms if exit are filled with people, unless escape almost impossible, and in any event imperiling the lives of all who attend. It has been truly said:

Do not decorate Christmas trees with paper, cotton or other inflammable material. Use metal tinsel and other non-inflammable decorations only, and see that the tree and that the children in reaching for things cannot pull it over.

Do not use cotton to represent snow. It too must have snow use asbestos fiber.

Do not permit children to light or re-light the candles while parents are not present.

They frequently set fire to their clothing thereby.

The tree itself will burn when the needles become dry.

Keep matches out of the reach of children at all holiday times.

Candles are meant to be lighted and if the children can get matches they will invariably use them.

"A house of merriment is better than a house of mourning."

The State Fire Marshall does not wish to be understood as opposing the proper celebration of the Christmas season. The fullest freedom be by the public in its observance is commendable, but every Christmas for scores many fires destroy hundreds of lives and thousands of dollars worth of property, which could have been prevented had proper precautions been observed. Therefore, especially during holiday season, the most trivial should be used for tree illumination. Candles is the most common material used for tree decorating; it is also the most inflammable and should not be tolerated. Throw on a substance called mineral wool, made of asbestos, which will give a better effect and will not burn. Satan Claus having appeared minus him a human torch, unless his outfit is fireproof,

CONGRESS UPHOLDS POSITION OF HUERTA

VOTE THAT RECENT ELECTION IS VOID AND SET ANOTHER FOR JULY.

WANT DICTATOR IN INTERIM

This Means Provisional President Would Hold Over Till September at Least—U. S. Boat Is Searched By Mexican Sailors.

Mexico City, Dec. 11.—The Mexican congress has nullified the presidential elections. New elections are called for next July.

Expect Huerta to Hold.

Congress, according to this action, expects General Huerta to remain in the presidency for at least seven months more and if the time necessary for the selection and installation of his successor is taken into consideration, it will be well towards the end of September next year before he yields his power.

In voting the recent presidential election was cast the deputies decided to fix the first Sunday in July, 1914, as the date for the new election. They also confirmed the position of General Huerta as provisional president until then. The action of the deputies was accompanied by no debate.

No Dissenting Votes.

The committee's report was approved without a dissenting vote. It was not until the last clause was read referring to General Huerta as provisional president that the chamber gave evidence other than that of a well trained organization. When the reading clerk stopped some one began applauding and then instantly the deputies were shouting vivas for Huerta.

The presiding officer was finally able to remind them that such sentiment was all very well, but that it was necessary to ratify the enthusiasm by votes. The measures taken also provide for the election of a new congress, which will have to be voted also.

Search U. S. Fishing Schooner.

Pensacola, Fla.—Captain Peterson of the American fishing schooner Dorothy, just arrived, reported to the owners that a Mexican gunboat recently overhauled and searched his vessel in the gulf, over Cbot island. In the vicinity of the snapper banks.

The gunboat chased the schooner and with leveled guns made a forcible boarding. After the search the schooner was allowed to proceed. The Mexicans, it is stated, were looking for a shipment of arms supposed to be for the rebel army.

Federals Threaten to Desert.

Progreso, Yucatan.—A crowd of federal troops standing on the banks of the river, shouted over to the American side that they would desert if attacked by rebels.

It was reported that the rebels around Ojinaga were rapidly increasing and that a force of three or four thousand was expected soon. As the rebels appeared more numerous, the federal troops showed increasing disinclination to remain at Ojinaga.

REPUBLICANS BLOCK MOVE

G. O. P. Members of Senate Object to Majority Quitting 13-Hour Session.

Washington, Dec. 11.—An attempt to begin preliminary consideration by President Wilson's anti-trust program by the senate interstate commerce committee during the currency debate now in the senate was blocked by the Republicans.

Chairman Newlands of the committee asked permission to hold sessions of the committee while the senate was in meeting. Senators Bristow and Townsend strenuously objected.

"If we have to stay here thirteen hours a day to consider the banking and currency bill, the members of the interstate committee ought to stay here, too," declared Senator Bristow emphatically.

Senator Townsend, who is a member of the committee, said if the senate would proceed with the currency bill to a normal way the committee would have plenty of time to meet without encroaching on the time of the senate.

New Strauss Opera in U. S.

New York, Dec. 11.—The Metropolitan Opera House was the scene of the great event of the season in the opera world—the first performance in America of Richard Strauss' opera "Der Rosenkavalier," first produced in Dresden in January, 1911, and last year the most frequently performed opera in the repertoire of German and Austrain opera houses. A notable audience witnessed the performance.

168 Dead in Floods.

Houston, Tex., Dec. 11.—Reports received by the Texas relief committee at Austin, at the annual meeting of the National Red Cross Association, which opened here at the Hotel Astor. Among the chief of these matters was the question of compensation, pure food and drugs, industrial mediation laws, regulation of public utilities, regulation of industrial corporations, a national survey or inventory of the progress, and welfare of the nation. The annual dinner of the federation will take place tomorrow night.

165 Dead in Floods.

Houston, Tex., Dec. 11.—The crest of the Brazos river flood is passing Richmond, a town of 1,200, and threatens to overtop the bluff which here forms the protection of the little city from all floods. A further rise would cause heavy damage. Surrounding low lands, 50 miles from the gulf of Mexico, are inundated. Reports of additional life loss throughout the flood district have brought the total to 165. Of this number, the majority are negroes. Rescue work is continued.

Safety Conference Open.

New York, Dec. 11.—That the world now regards human life as more valuable than it did a decade ago, and that great strides have been made in the direction of greater safety for workers in shops, but that much still remains to be done were the principal points brought out at the meeting of the Safety and Sanitation conference here today. The morning session closed with moving pictures supplied by the United States bureau of mines, showing the methods of rescue work in coal mines.

MYSTERY IN CASE OF BANKER

T. B. DAWSON OF LA MOURE, N. D., FATALLY INJURED.

Police Believe Man Shot Himself—Victim Says It Was Case of Hold-up.

Minneapolis, Dec. 11.—T. B. Dawson, a North Dakota banker and pioneer, was probably fatally wounded in the car of the Kenley Institute, Tenth street and Park avenue, Tuesday night. He was found by a jury. Each may be fined $200 and sentenced to six months in jail.

The band of militant housewives who took the law in their own hands was composed of Mrs. Rose Sidefield, Mrs. Levina Raymond, Mrs. Minnie Watkins, Mrs. Mary Sabel and Mrs. John Stadfield.

Mrs. Kate Wagner, the sixth woman, who started to carry the high-order ouststide the village limits, was freed by the jury because she returned home before the victim was given her ride. There was no evidence Mrs. Wagner helped support the rail and tie burden.

Mrs. Sabel's age of 65 years makes her the oldest of the convicted five, and the others are well above forty. They eat huddled and dozed in the courtroom as the verdict was read. They have no resemblance to the sorry women, outraged because they believe a neighbor deserved the company of another to her crippled husband, who drew Mrs. Richardson from her home by a subterfuge, placed her astride a weather-beaten conveying, bore her screaming and shaking to the edge of town and dumped her in the road with a warning not to return.

Mrs. Richardson is not vindictive against her former friends. She was satisfied with a conviction and was agreeable to letting the women off with a fine. She has a civil suit for $100,000 pending against them.

GRAY HAIRED WOMEN GUILTY

FIVE WHO RODE WOMAN ON RAIL MUST PAY PENALTY.

Oldest is 55—Sixth Freed as She Backed Out Before Victim Was Mistreated.

Wanukegan, Ill., Dec. 8.—Five gray-haired women of the village of Volo, who rode Mrs. John Richardson on a rail one night in July, because her home was linked by many with that of her brother-in-law, were found guilty here by a jury. Each may be fined $200 and sentenced to six months in jail.

LOPEZ LIKELY ALIVE YET

Searchers Ordered Out of Mine to Prevent Needless Loss of Life—Smudging to Be Renewed.

Bingham, Utah, Dec. 10.—After a day of many alarms, the search for Ralph Lopez, the Mexican deserter, has again developed into a waiting game. While the sheriffs were in council to act on a plan to resume smudging the mine, a report that a dynamite charge had been placed by Lopez in a lower level, broke up the meeting and sent the men to the mine.

Believing that Lopez was still alive in the mine, where he took refuge on Nov. 27, after killing six men, Sheriff Smith ordered all the deputies to prevent a needless sacrifice of more and had blockheads erected a second mine to protect the exits. If smudging operations are not resorted to it possible the closed tunnel months will be opened until there is no doubt that Lopez either is dead or has escaped.

Federal Flight Confirmed.

Presidio, Tex., Dec. 10.—The complete rout of Hnerta's federal army in Northern Mexico with the flight of his generals for safety on the border and the demoralization of the unpaid troops was established by the arrival here today of the American consul at Chihuahua City, Mexico, opposite Presidio, of the civilians and soldiers who deserted Chihuahua City.

Son's Arrest Ruins Father.

Chicago, Dec. 5.—Worry and expense involved in the arrest of his son is said by his friends to have left Dr. Carl H. Von Klein penniless. Dr. Von Klein was found by his friends a patient in a charity ward at the Cook county hospital. Trustees of John Crerar library, at whom Dr. Von Klein is employed as assistant, and directors of corporations, a national survey or inventory of the progress, and welfare of the nation. FOOD SPECULATORS FLAYED IN HOUSE

"VORACIOUS VULTURES OF MARKET PLACES" IS EPITHET APPLIED.

McKELLAR AUTHOR OF BILL

Would Prohibits "Plunderbund of Food Sharks"—Ownership of Mail Cars Is Also Discussed.

Washington, Dec. 10.—"Voracious vultures of the market places" and "plunderbund of food sharks" were characterizations applied to cold storage speculators on the corner perishable foodstuffs to boost prices, by Representative McKellar of Tennessee, when he spoke championing his bill for federal regulation of the cold storage business.

Saying that his proposed legislation was not designed to injure the cold storage business as such, Mr. McKellar declared: "The drastic features of the bill are aimed only at the corrupt and dishonest, at the gamblers and speculators, at the voracious vultures, who stand around in the market place and reap where they have not sown and fatten on other people's food. I do not believe any member of this great house will stand up for any such plunderbund of food sharks."

The McKellar bill, which would prescribe both prison terms and heavy fines for violation of its terms, would make it illegal to ship adulterated and misbranded food products into interstate commerce and would limit the periods that food products may be held in storage without becoming adulterated.

Reviews Investigation.

Reviewing the data produced by the senate committee which investigated the high cost of living, McKellar submitted further statistics intended to show that packers and warehousemen corner markets on foodstuffs to unfairly increase profits. He asserted that there would be no relief that the federal government should enter the gambling on the state.

"I cannot conceive," Mr. McKellar declared, "any greater crime against the public than cornering markets of foodstuffs. Almost every housewife in the land complains bitterly of the high cost of eggs and we find these gamblers deliberately storing the price of eggs and reaping unfair and unjust profits from it, but actually laughing at the public. This bill would put the gamblers out of business and would give the consumer a chance."

Profits of from 100 per cent to 200 per cent are made on "cold storage kings" on storage eggs, Mr. McKellar declared.

Practical trial of government ownership of railway mail cars is proposed in a bill introduced in the house by the postoffice and post roads committee. The measure would appropriate $100,000 to be used by the postmaster general in leasing and operating a number of cars as he experiments.

The average construction cost, repairs, depot and weather house cost is about $11,000 a year for 60-foot steel cars. The measure would allow the government for leasing mail cars, all of which are now owned by the railroads, is approximately $6,000 per car per year.

Spring-Like Weather Passes.

Chicago, Dec. 5.—While the Middle West, which hosted Saturday of their spring-like weather and blooming flowers, had a touch of winter. A drop of from 25 to 30 degrees in temperature in 24 hours was reported generally through the lake region. Snow accompanied the cold wave in most places. In Chicago, where the thermometer has kept around 60 degrees for the last two weeks, the mercury dropped to 16 degrees below and weather bureau officials predicted it will go lower.

Gynamite to Kill Lopez.

Bingham, Utah, Dec. 8.—Sticks of dynamite were buried into a tunnel in the Utah-Apex mine, in which Ralph Lopez, the slayer of six men, was believed to have crawled, wounded, dragging his weapon behind him. Tons of earth and rock choke the tunnel and work has begun clearing away the debris to learn if the Mexican desperado has now been trapped. Lopez was traced into the tunnel by miners, showing that he apparently had crawled on his hands and knees, dragging his rifle.

AID FOR SOUTH FLOOD VICTIMS

U. S. SENDS TEN FREIGHT LOADS OF SUPPLIES TO TEXAS.

Estimates Put Number of Deaths in Brazos Freshet at Nine Thousands Marooned.

Washington, Dec. 10.—Ten freight cars loaded with 25,000 rations, tents, cots, and blankets have been dispatched in a special train from Galveston from the quartermaster's department of the United States army for relief of flood sufferers in the Brazos bottoms by order of Secretary Garrison.

Houston, Tex.—The number of known dead in the flood which has spread over the lowlands in half a dozen counties in South Central Texas has reached 150 with several thousand the count still late in the week.

"It will be colder during the second half of the week over the Northwest and by the end of the week over the North Central portion of the country. The cold wave from the western basin will extend into the Upper Mississippi valley and the regions, reaching the lower Lake region toward the end of the week"

HUERTA'S FAMILY FLEEING

Report Again Current That Relatives of Dictator Have Left Mexico City.

Mexico City, Dec. 10.—Provisional President Huerta's family is said reported to have left the capital. The report is that the members of the president's household have gone to Guadalajara, capital of Jalisco, from where it is said they will go to Manzanillo, Colima.

Augustin Lide Fuentes, President Huerta's son-in-law; Mrs. Fuentes and Miss Emma Rivera, another daughter, were in the party which left for Guadalajara. It was reported that the president's wife will join the party later, but this is not confirmed.

Rembrandt Coming to Chicago.

Chicago, Dec. 10.—Martin A. Ryerson announces the purchase of a Rembrandt for $110,000 at a dinner. The picture is a part of the Roda Peat collection of the Rembrandts. It is a likeness of Rembrandt's father and was painted in 1630.

Wheat Raises 1,500 Miles.

Philadelphia, Dec. 10.—Declaring that they had wheated their farms the wife girls nearly 1,500 miles in baby carriages, Miller, Dalgargot and his wife arrived in this city after a four months' journey from Manitoba. The last lap, from Lancaster, Pa., and a few other short stretches were made in trains, but most of the trip was made afoot. Updegraff, a native of Ohio city, who was employed as a sheep herder in Nebraska, lost his position and decided to come back east.

416 Killed; 2,162 Injured.

New York, Dec. 9.—During the 11 months past 416 users of public highways were killed and 2,146 injured in this state by automobiles and other motor vehicles, according to a statement made by Mitchell May, secretary of state. Mr. May said that it was apparent that "there is something radically wrong both in the law and its enforcement, as this sacrifice of human life, almost double that of last year, is too heavy a toll to pay for the advantages of the automobile."

TELLS HOW GRAFT FUND WAS SPLIT

ALLEGED TWO TAMMANY MEN GOT $11,000 ON A SINGLE PAVING DEAL.

PART FOR CAMPAIGN FUND

Whitman Says Indictments Against Chairman at Committee Will Follow in Wake of Jury Report.

New York, Dec. 11.—James R. Gaffney, brother-in-law of Charles F. Murphy and Joseph D. Carroll, former treasurer of Tammany Hall, split $11,000 in commissions with the agent of a paving company under no oral agreement by which they were to use their political influence to obtain contracts for the company with the state highway department, according to testimony adduced at District Attorney Whitman's John Doe inquiry into state highway grafts.

Part for Contribution.

Two thousand dollars more of the commission went in cash, according to the testimony, to George H. Palmer, chairman of the Democratic state committee in response to a request for a campaign contribution made by C. Gordon Reel, deputy highway commissioner, through whom the contracts were obtained. The contribution, the district attorney learned, was never reported.

The agent was John M. Murphy, representing the firm of Warren Brothers of Boston, manufacturers of bitulithic and other pavement material, and it was he who gave the testimony.

It is now to be questioned by District Attorney Whitman the man Murphy portion he has thus far brought to light and that at an early day he will place it before the grand jury and seek an indictment for conspiracy.

Whitman's First Step.

Before taking up the case, however, Mr. Whitman will present to the grand jury evidence that State Chairman Palmer received a political contribution from a corporation, an offense for which Palmer, Reel, Murphy, treasurer of the Democratic state committee now stands indicted.

Murphy testified that he did not know what Gaffney and Carroll had done to help obtain the contracts, but that he had taken them into what he termed an "equal partnership" because "they could have helped me with Mr. Reel."

Through his contract with Warren Brothers he was to get a commission of 12½ cents a square yard on all pavement material that he could induce the state highway department to purchase.

Get $13,000 Commission.

In October of 1912 he saw Reel, he testified, and obtained through him contracts which netted him a commission of $13,000. This he has received to date, equally with Gaffney and Carroll, has held down to him it he wasn't going to do anything for the commission.

In response to this request Murphy said he gave $2,000 in cash to George H. Palmer as a contribution, which he took from an undated receipt, which he produced.

Murphy was loath to concede that he had taken Gaffney and Carroll into partnership with him because of their political influence.

WILLIAM DEERING IS DEAD

Head of Big Harvester Manufacturing Company Passes Away in Florida.

Chicago, Dec. 11.—William Deering, the harvester manufacturer, is dead at Miami, Fla., his winter home, according to a message received today by his sons.

Mr. Deering went to Miami several weeks ago, accompanied by the members of his immediate family. He had been ill for a few months and went south to escape the rigors of winter and in the hope that his health might be benefited. He failed gradually till the end came.

'FRISCO OFFICIALS RESIGN

PRESIDENT AND VICE PRESIDENT GIVE "FAIRNESS" AS REASON.

Came As Climax to Suit of Share Owner Who Seeks to Recover Millions Alleged Divided.

St. Louis, Dec. 11.—The personnel of the receivership of the St. Louis & San Francisco railroad was separated from the directorate and officership of the road when W. G. Nixon and W. H. Biddle, receivers, resigned as president and vice president, respectively, and as directors.

Thomas H. West, chairman of the board of directors of the St. Louis Union Trust company, which financed many Frisco affairs before the receivership, and director of the road itself, already had vacated the office of receiver-ship. Resignation having been accepted Monday—and Tuesday James W. Lusk, a retired banker of Portland, who previously had not been connected with the road, succeeded Mr. West as receiver.

The resignation of Mr. West as receiver and the retirement of Receivers Nixon and Biddle from their railroad offices, was due to the investigations into the reed contract sought by the interstate commerce commission.

This was stated practically in the letter of Judge Sanborn Monday in which he accepted the resignation of Mr. West and in the joint letter of resignation sent by Messrs. Nixon and Biddle, who wrote:

"In order to treat all interests at this critical and imparatially, we have concluded to resign from the assistant and vice president, respectively, and as directors of your company. We appreciate very greatly your expression of confidence in honoring us with these appointments and thank you sincerely."

The resignation of Mr. Nixon and of Mr. Biddle came as the climax of important developments in Frisco affairs.

Two hours before their resignations were turned in to the board of directors, William Niles of New York, who owns 600 shares of Frisco stock, had applied through his attorney to Judge Sanborn in the federal circuit court for permission to bring suit against certain officers and former officers of the road to compel them to restore individual profits aggregating $3,976,000 alleged to have been made by them in promotion of feeder lines and their sale to the Frisco.

Judge W. H. Sanborn just before closing court for the day granted Niles the right to sue on behalf of himself and other stockholders.

Belfast, Dec. 11.—The embargo on arms and ammunition has been made more stringent on orders served on railroads by the collector of customs providing for the examination of trunks baggage of all incoming travellers.

Pullets Are Laying Everywhere.

Washington, Dec. 11.—Relief from the prohibitive egg prices is in sight from almost every department of agriculture assurance in a special report on the situation. The pullets all over the country have begun to lay. Information reaching the department is to the effect that already poultry fowners are reporting fifty per cent increase in eggs. The report declares this change of heart on the part of the chickens will be hurryard in not due to the threatened egg famine.

1,750,000 Acres Available to Settlers.

Washington, Dec. 11.— Secretary Lane has designated 1,750,000 acres of dry lands in Western states as suitable for entry under the enlarged homestead act. The largest area designated is in Montana, where more than 1,500,000 acres were included in a single order. Other states benefited are North Dakota, in which 60,000 acres have been designated; Arizona with 85,000 acres, New Mexico with about 4,000 acres, and Idaho with a little less than 1,000 acres.

INEXPENSIVE CHRISTMAS GIFTS

By PEGGY POWERS

MOST certainly you promised yourself last Christmas that your future Christmas remembrance would be completed in ample time, and under no circumstances would the next Christmas season find you in a rush and hustle, planning and finishing belated Christmas gifts. What an idle dream that was, for here it is Christmas time approaching again, and you are racking your brain and attempting to decide what to give at the eleventh hour, in a great hurry and turmoil isn't it so?

What sort to give, would be a more appropriate phrase. For in the selection of your gifts some regard has to be given to the adaptability and the utility of the present. A wise idea is to spend more time than money in thinking what would be suitable and practicable for each individual. Your gift would be all the more appreciated if it expresses something of yourself and shows that your own personal thoughtful have been bestowed upon a selection of the tokens.

The real essence of the Christmas spirit is not expenditure. How easy it is to purchase a gross gifts if one has a well filled purse! But if the recipient can buy the same article with little effort, the gift idea will not be remembered for very long. Let your gifts be expressions of love and thoughtfulness. The thought and time you put in gifts of your own handiwork will mean much more than if you simply give something for the sake of giving.

The cost of homemade gifts is generally small. A multitude of gifts can be contrived of materials you have at hand, and of odd pieces of linen, ribbons and silk. Clever fingers can fashion charming novelties. Gladness is the keynote of the Yuletide season. Go at your tasks in a cheerful, blithesome manner, and you will find your work one of joy. The following are suggestions may provide you with numerous ideas for attractive gifts, which may be made inexpensively.

With little effort dainty sachets to perfume your friends' gowns may be made at a very small cost. Make six sachets in pastel shades of satin ribbon about two inches square. Fill with soft cotton dusted with some fragrant sachet powder. Place the sachets one on top of the other and tie with narrow ribbon. Attach the safety pins are attached to each sachet so the bags can be pinned on the different frocks.

One distinct novelty is a colonial pin cushion. For this unique cushion you will have to purchase a glass candlestick in a simple design. Cover one side of a four-inch square of cardboard with some pretty silk which harmonizes with the color scheme of your friends' bedrooms. Form a mound-like cushion of cotton on the other side and cover with the silk. The cushion is fastened to the candlestick by fine wires or thread. Around the edge of the cushion sew a beaded fringe about three inches long.

Another pin cushion base for the foundation a four-inch wire tea strainer. The back is fitted with a disk of cotton covered in crinoline. The wire part is lined with flowered cretonne and filled with cotton. Wind the handle with narrow ribbon and finish with a pretty bow.

The girl away at college would surely by overjoyed with a shoe bag, which she can hang inside her closet door. The shoe bag should be half the length of the door with compartments for shoes, slippers and rubbers and a long compartment on one side for an umbrella, and on the other for books not in use. The materials used should be heavy denim with the compartments bound in tape.

A pleasing notion would be to make any articles for the girls away at colleges in their college colors. A piece of gay colored cretonne bound all around with a pretty braid would also be acceptable as a trunk cover.

Dear to every girl's heart are pretty dress accessories. The new Robert Pierre collars with jabots of frilly lace certainly will be a welcome addition to your friends' wardrobes. The collars are usually made of black satin with the ruffles of lace about two inches wide.

Chic bandoir caps are made of circles of shadow lace 14 inches wide with soft ruffles of narrow lace around the crown. The ruffles should be made in the back wider than in the front to give the effect of a Dutch bonnet. The cap is decorated with little pink rosebuds and a band of pink ribbon.

Dainties La Dresser sachets are made out of folded satin ribbon in three-inch lengths. Turn the ends at the corners to form the petals. Group the petals together and join in a wire form which has been twisted with narrow green satin.

A natural looking bunch of violets is formed of tiny bows of twisted violet ribbon finished with green satin.

Hat pins, collar pins and buckles make wonderfully effective when covered with ribbon rose made of narrow folded ribbon grouped closely together. If you prefer you can use satin cherries made of tiny circles of satin filled with cotton, with petals of green ribbon.

The girl who chances will find much pleasure in receiving a pretty pad of beaded satin slipper bows to match her party slippers.

For the traveler a small crotcone pillow to rest the head on on the sides is a boon about two inches square. Fill with soft cotton dusted with some fragrant sachet powder. Place the sachets one on top of the other and tie with narrow ribbon. Attach the safety pins are attached to each sachet so the bags can be pinned on the different frocks.

One distinct novelty is a colonial pin cushion. For this unique cushion you will have to purchase a glass candlestick in a simple design. Cover one side of a four-inch square of cardboard with some pretty silk which harmonizes with the color scheme of your friends' bedrooms. Ribbon bedroom slippers are especially new and nothing could be simpler to make. Sheer flowered ribbon to soft lamb's wool, draw an elastic through a lacing at the upper edge, leaving a beading about an inch wide. Make full rosettes of ribbon and place one on each instep.

A dotty case will delight the heart of any housewife. They can be made in different sizes. Figured cretonne may be used in making one case with the inside lined in white material. Cover two circles of pasteboard with the material and finish beatly with a pretty wash braid. Use ribbon to keep the dollies in place.

A set of holders for bendling hot dishes are made six inches square, of some pretty chintz. These are attached to an apron to match the material.

A set of boxes covered with a pretty pattern of wall paper would be most useful and acceptable to keep in the bureau drawers. These must be pasted neatly and the covers attached to the box.

Another novelty is a chest of draws for trinkets, hair pins or jewelry. Cover the box with cretonne and fit three smaller boxes into it. The boxes are covered with the same material and here little brass rings sewed on for the center of each box, so they can be pulled out like drawers.

Aprons are always charming gifts. There are numerous suggestions for aprons. Fascinating aprons are made of sheer lawn with butterflies embroidered on them. The bottom is finished in three deep scallops edged with a fancy stitch and lace. The two end scallops form pockets for the sewing articles. The belt is formed of ribbon trimmed with jaunty little bows. Then there are dainty dimity aprons, overall aprons, and many aprons you can devise with a little ingenuity.

We see bags here, there and every where; a flage of all sorts and sizes, from the elaborate affairs made of strips of Japanese embroidery like these shown in Chinetown, to those of the simplest design. Sewing bags, opera bags, laundry bags, shoe bags, slipper bags, corset bags, vanity bags, made of ribbon and fitted out with a small mirror and a tiny powder puff. Manicure bags may be fitted with the smaller size manicure articles, and for the children you can make marble bags, school bags, bean bags and pencil bags.

A useful receptacle for sewing materials is a lantern bag made of plain and flowered ribbon, or you could utilize any material you have. For the bottom of the bag cover a cardboard circle three inches and a half in diameter. Gather the flowered ribbon to this and here the trouble. Run an embroidery hoop four inches in diameter around the upper edge. Join the plain material to this and about eight inches from this piece another hoop about four inches in diameter. This is the top of bag and is sheered over hoop. A round cover piece of cardboard is used as a cover and a fancy cord is used to carry it over the arm.

Another original bag for threads and needles is made of two circles of cretonne lined with satin. These are joined at intervals, leaving spaces for the spools. In the center is a little pin cushion. A ribbon draws through the different sections draws the little bag together.

Use a pretty piece of ribbon three-quarters of a yard in length for another sewing convrivance. Turn up one end to form a pocket for the spools of thread, and the other end for the thimble and small scissors, which is attached with a narrow ribbon. In the center space a piece of white flannel for the needles and pins. When not in use this case can be rolled up and fastened neatly with a ribbon bow.

Sometimes it is e rethur perplexing question what to give a man. Men always like something that adds to their comfort and personal convenience. If you can knit there is not much difficulty in deciding what to give. Knitted silk neckties are much in vogue.

Good, warm, fleecy mufflers are liked by the man who motors, and bed room slippers are also every welcome.

A telephone memorandum with a pencil attached would be a daily reminder of the giver. Cover a piece of cardboard with tan linen embroidered in pink roses. Buy a small pad of white paper and paste it on the linen.

Men invariably are pleased with personal gifts, such as handkerchiefs with the monogram embroidered in the corner.

A rather good idea is to present your friend with his monogram embroidered heavily in black satin ribbon. These monograms will be in service to sew in his overcoat, so that he can easily distinguish his coat from another's in a crowded place.

Then there are the men whose beds are covered in linen, and collar bags made on a circular form of card board covered with linen, embroidered in and edged with old gold braid.

For the man who shaves himself, a shaving pad is useful. Cover two squares of cardboard with any material you like. Then on the monogram on the center of the upper one, insert leaves of linen paper and tie together with a silk cord.

There are plenty of adorable gifts one can make for the baby. An ingenious idea is to cover an ordinary scale with pink ribbon and with it down the center, neatly finishing the edges so mother can see when baby has gained the new baby is gaining. Use narrow ribbon to lace up the scale. Also a cute little water bag covered in soft pretty fangel will be an acceptable gift for the baby.

Darling little bibs are made of buck toweling with floral designs embroidered cross-stitched in red thread across the border.

A carriage strap which affords much amusement to the infant is made of elastic with rings and books. One section for flowers, one for animals and one for birds, would be much appreciated.

A sewing book made of dark grey lining pasted with pictures, is also a gift a child can derive much pleasure from. After you have your pressing completed, be careful that they are wrapped so that they look a little like a book about them. Use plenty of green and white paper. Seal the package with holly ribbon or gold cord and don't forget to tuck a spray of holly or mistletoe among the wrapping.

O, the heaven is all resplendant
With the radiance of a star;
Yonder, in the ether, pendant
Seems its glorious all afar.

In the East its splendor shineth,
Sages see its golden gleam;
Read the prophecy what foretheth?
Follow it to Bethlehem.

Costly gifts and adoration
Hasten they with joy to bring;
Traveling from their far-off station
Come to hail the born King.

Still falls the night on Judah's plains,
Shine soft the stars, the welkin gem,
When shepherds catch seraphic strains
From angel chords borne down to them.

Hymns of triumph, hymns of glory,
Hymns of peace what foretold?
Shepherds list earth's sweetest story
And the world its gladdest song.

Sweeps the paean down the ages,
Echoes it from shore to shore,
Glide with hope time's rippling pages,
Waits the closet door.

Earth redeemed, with heaven, vies!
As it sounds the glad refrain,
"Glory, glory in the highest,
Peace on earth, good will to men!"

COULD SEE NOTHING PRETTY

Greatly to Be Feared That Feminine Critic Was Afflicted with a Grouch.

"Women have sons mad!" exclaimed a man the other day as he sat on the porch of a fashionable country club while a smart tea was in progress, and watched the fair members of the sex and fro in all their prettiest gowns. "They should be sent to asylums until they recover their sental balance and learn to live decently. They have gone fashion mad. They breathe and live only for fashion. Better a suffragette who thinks only of votes than these women who know nothing outside of frocks and frills and feathers."

His companion, a fair, slight woman garbed in the latest of gowns, looked at him pityingly and murmured:—"There speaks the bachelor!"

"Yea, and glad of it," he answered in a huff.

He glanced at two charming girls in frocks of white embroidered linen trimmed with fur, but he did not look at their dainty gowns, only at their feet.

One wore little white velvet slippers with high pointed velvet heels and tiny diamond buckles, the other white silk slippers with Dresden china heels.

"I never dreamt when I pitied Chinese women forced to cramp their feet that our own women would wilfully torture themselves with such shoes and heels. Dresden china! What an absurdity!"

"But how pretty they are!" expostulated his companion, and called his attention to some of the other dainty shoes there, for every pair was revealed by the short and slashed skirts.

But the man saw nothing beautiful in all the novel footgear.

"What do minor details matter if the ensemble is unpresentin" he demanded. "Those women walk as if they needed balancing poles. How they can dance as they do passes my understanding."—Chicago Record-Herald.

BANDITS OF 2 ERAS

Outlaw, His Contemporaries In Scott's Day and Ours.

Rob Roy and Jesse James—Both Marauders Had Their Friends and Each Was Renowned for Deeds of Kindness.

New York—If we are not certain as to the date of the death of Rob Roy, it may lighten our blushes to remember that Sir Walter Scott looked on it as doubtful, says a writer in the Living Church. Reports varied, the best authenticated tradition showed that the daring McGregor had outlived his wildest deeds, and it may take it for granted that he died in the latter part of the decade between 1730 and 1740. Assuming that, we have some interesting comparisons to make. A man whose real life was as sensational as that of the feudal ones trooper, a chieftain who levied blackmail on peaceful cattle raisers, who plundered the country, who long dreamed of upsetting Hanover and setting up Stuart, a character half swashbuckler, roaring and half sixteenth, was living during a part at least of George Washington's infancy. Franklin may have heard many a story of him. Paul Jones may have sailed with the men he caught a glimpse of Rob Roy through coast and inland traditions.

Take Rob Roy's own strong personality and add what the genius of Scott has thrown around him, and he is a fascinating "last of the Mohicans" type. Part of the same Scottish land of claymore and corcunach had gone out with the civil wars of Cromwell's day, the revolution had cut short many a line, the uprising of 1715 had quenched some bold spirits, exiles had died heart broken in foreign courts and climates. Rob Roy was a link with the past. He frighted many another Sir Hildebrand, and even as his estimable kinsman, Baillie Nichol Jarvie, he dated back and his starchs even some who have read Scott's noble story half a dozen times. It is well to think of a man who had come before Rob Roy had died.

At the time the outlaw breathed his last Joseph Butler had written the Analogy, and George Berkeley, whose only child, the revolution had cut short many a line, the uprising of 1715 had quenched some bold spirits, exiles had died heart broken in foreign courts and climates. Examinations were made, watches were established over the prisoners and it was reported to me that they were wrapped on the last stages of a fatal disease. The other convict alluded to by Mr. Taft undoubtedly was John R. Walsh, the Chicago banker.

BAREFOOT BOY IS PASSING

In the Last Ten Years the Manufacture of Stockings Has Doubled in the United States.

Washington.—Evidence that the "barefoot boy with cheek of tan" is passing is contained in a report on the hosiery and knit goods industry issued by the census bureau. The report shows that in the decade ending with 1909 the output of socks and stockings and like articles more than doubled in value, which is a much greater increase than the growth of population.

The inference offered by the experts is that barefooted youngsters now are no longer the fashion.

The value of the output of 1,784 hosiery and knit goods mills in 1909 was more than $300,000,000, the report sets forth.

BRIEF OF NEAR 20,000 PAGES

Appeal of Southern Pacific Railroad in the Land Grant Case Is in Forty Volumes.

Portland, Ore.—A legal brief printed in Portland is said to be more than twice as large as any other ever printed.

This particular brief is the appeal of the Southern Pacific company in the land grant case, in which the government sued to recover several million acres of land and won the suit in the lower courts. The railroad company is now having its brief printed for the United States Supreme court.

There will be 20,000 pages of printed matter. These will be made up into 40 volumes—the size of the ordinary law book. The brief will, in itself, be a formidable library, so far as the number of volumes goes. Each volume will be composed of 500 pages, which is more than are contained in the "best sellers." When completed, the brief will be almost twice as large as a standard encyclopedia.

Although the brief must be printed and bound, it will be a very limited edition. Only some corporations like a railroad with unlimited capital can afford to compile and publish a brief of such magnitude. Every phase of the land grant case, together with its history and the most inconsequential testimony of witnesses, will appear in the brief. If the justices of the Supreme court of the United States attempt to read the entire brief it will demand their entire time for several months in the reading alone.

DEMENTED MAN DIED OF STARVATION.

Last evening, while hunting rabbits, two boys discovered the body of a man, since identified as that of Peter Petersen, lying in the brush two miles north of the Haugen farm, in Northland township. Sheriff Kelly came to Bemidji for Coroner Swanson this morning and after an investigation the Coroner determined that Petersen had died of starvation.

He was missed by Smith and Shlair of Grand Forks by whom he had been employed off and on for the past 12 years, about four months ago.

On Sept. 2 he appeared at the Haugen farm, but when one of the men of the farm approached him he turned and fled to the woods, being apparently off mentally.

Later on a man's cap was found and a few days ago a coat was found and Mr. Haugen was on the point of starting an organized search for the owner when the two boys found the body last night.

Petersen was single and had no relatives in this section as far as known. He had been dead at least two months when the body was found.—Tracker Times.

BABY LOST IN SWAMP

She Was Found After Neighbors Had Searched for Twenty-Four Hours.

After one hundred men and boys had searched the woods and swamps around Germantown for nearly twenty-four hours, Agnes, the little three year old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Zorstad, was found late this Thursday afternoon about a mile and a half from the Zorstad home. Although the child was rarely cold she had apparently not suffered from her unusual experience.

The baby had accompanied her mother to the barn late Wednesday afternoon. Unobserved she started back to the house. Her mother returning to the house a few minutes later missed her and on not finding her in the house or the garden. Later the neighbors joined the search and by 11 o'clock at night over one hundred men and boys were out with lanterns scouring the woods and the swamps.

Thursday morning Sheriff LaBree was called up over the 'phone and asked to wire for the blood hounds at Fergus Falls. Before they had been secured however, Will Payne of Germantown who was searching about a mile and a half from the Zorstad farm, found the baby wandering about in the center of a marsh. A heavy fog hung over the country during the time she was lost and her clothing was drenched with moisture. She was without any heavy wraps of any kind and she suffered from cold and exposure.

She was at once taken to the Zorstad home where she was dressed in dry clothing and within a few minutes was playing about the house as if nothing had happened.—Thief River News-Press.

WHAT'S THE MATTER WITH THE LOCAL CREAMERY?

For several weeks the Red Lake Falls creamery has not been operating and the question that has come to the mind of each person who has noted the fact is, "what's the matter with the creamery?"

The Gazette has had a "notion" that nothing is the matter with the creamery and that the creamery would continue to operate if given half a chance.

That "notion" has substantial backing in the report published at the bottom of this column. Does the report indicate that there's anything the matter with the creamery? Not at all. Read it item by item and see.

But it does indicate just what is the matter with the people by whose co-operative effort alone the creamery can be made a success and profitable. It indicates that the creamery business in Red Lake Falls just now is a co-operative business in name and not in fact.

Observe in the first item in that report that gives the answer to the question. Not enough cream has been delivered at the creamery. And because not enough butter fat has been delivered at the creamery the operating expenses have been too high. The share of the expense to be charged against each patron, each cow, each pound of butter fat or each pound of butter, is whatever way you look at it figure it has been too great. The same butter maker at the same salary, theoretically the same operating expenses could be charged against a few patrons as much business as the local creamery can stand has been and soon which would have made it possible to pay more for each pound of butter-fat—and that is telling it another way—than has been the case with those who should have helped to make the creamery and themselves more prosperous.

To get right down to hard tacks facts it seems that the trouble is with certain farmers who have practiced the most heinous form of business and politics of slipping their cream.

They have been doing this in the face of undeniable information as to the manner of the people who have been tempting them with offers of more than the market would allow. The reports of legal proceedings in actions brought against the alleged law indicated that the differences in prices offered have been slight, where there were no circumstances and places where there were circumstances the centralizers were trying to "put" not several cents a pound.

Anyone ought to be able to see what the centralizers are after. And their game is plain—only so long as farmers for a temporary bait of a little easy money will co-operate with them instead of with the local creamery which can if properly supported bring them a market of lasting stability.

All facts and figures show that the centralizers cannot "honestly" pay the average price of the well conducted creamerien. The butter of the society creamery thru the price became the country butter maker has the fresh raw material to work with and consequently it commands a better price on the market. The well supported country creamery can be operated more economically than a plant in a large city. To ship cream is a greater expense than the shipping of the product of that cream in the form of butter.

The people to the centralizer makes his profit by "taking it out" of the people in those communities where there are no creameries. And starving heifers to those communities where it may be possible to put struggling creameries out of business.

After all, it is the farmers' privilege to ship his cream if he wants to, and it's "his own business", of course. However, it has brought some pleasure to the Gazette to comment on the methods of this certain graft as compensation for the time and energy it has been compelled to put in fighting for the graft who as practical farmers should know better. And if because of what has been said there is a little less of the business the Gazette will be gratified. For this advertising—for the effort and space used in presenting and fighting for the Red Lake Falls creamery efforts—there is no charge.

There is something to that last statement, in Gazette has returned checks and rejected the proposition of people who have tried to buy space in this paper to "BOOST" Red Lake Falls CREAMERY" to I. One Skimmer or some other graft. The Gazette has not been shipping its cream, but has been and is boosting those farmers who have been co-operating in an effort to put a creamery going right. And, if you care to know it, the Gazette could have shipped considerable more.

All that the local creamery needs to make it a real big success is the co-operation of more farmers with more cows. Farmers are here and so are the cows; the co-operation must be.

The affairs of the local creamery are in good shape. The directors wisely decided not to pay more than they could afford to pay with the limited patronage and not put the operation in a hole.

The temporary closing of the creamery should serve as a warning. The creamery will open again in the spring. Let us then give it all the support which is all that it needed to provide a permanently stable market. This is important since dairy farming is sure to be one of the important local industries. Read the report.

ST. HILAIRE

A prominent citizen, who, by the way, has been a total abstainer for many years, saw a smoke on the cement walk near his home last Tuesday. Being a saint at this time of the year would indicate that our claims to being in the "banana belt" are not without foundation.

A serious fire was narrowly averted last Saturday when a small outbuilding near the H. B. Eden residence became ignited from an overheated stove. The prompt response of the fire department and the good work of the lastly formed bucket brigade prevented the spread of the flames to the residence. No damage was done save that to the small building, which was burned to the ground.

While C. C. Elliot was driving his big Peerless car, on the disk grade west of town last Monday evening one of the front side axles broke, throwing the car into the ditch. There were three lady occupants with Mr. Elliot at the time, two of whom were badly shaken up and scratched up by jumping before the car came to a stop. The two that remained in the car were unhurt. The car was repaired and left for Minneapolis Tuesday evening.—Specialator.

The Local Field

Mrs. C. R. C. Baker entertained the P. & P. B. Tuesday evening.

We have another stock of these good lamp burners. Price 25c.—Hunt Kunkel Hardware Co.—Adv.

Chas. Kruse, after being laid up with rheumatism for several weeks is now able to be about.

First come, first served Yes but better hurry if you want your first pick. Stock fast going away at the New Jewelry Store—Adv

P. S. Goedker spent Sunday at Crookston with Mrs. Goedker, who is a patient in a Crookston hospital. Mrs. Goedker underwent an operation a week ago from the effects of which she is recovering slowly.

The local postoffice will be open on Christmas day from 12 m. until 1 p. m. All carriers will serve their routes on Christmas day.

If you are in doubts as to where to go for Christmas shopping, just step in to the new Jewelry Store for some real bargains.—Jos. Nonnamaker.—Adv.

The children of the Presbyterian Sunday School will give a Christmas program Tuesday evening, Dec. 23, at 7:30 o'clock at the church. Parents and all interested in the church or Sunday School are cordially invited.

A New York concern sent us 12 dresses on consignment. We have no money invested in these and will offer them for one week only very cheap, $5.75 up to $16.00, chiffon crepe de chine, etc., beautifully made. Come quick.—LaBlesconiers.—Adv.

Mrs. Philip Beaudin of Louisville township is a patient in St. Vincent hospital, Crookston, and her case will require careful treatment. Mrs. Beaudin treated a corn with carbolic acid, but made the treatment much more violent than it should have been and the flesh was burned from the bones of one of her toes. Blood poison developed and she was taken to Crookston for treatment. After her foot had been dressed a blood vessel that had been exposed burst and for a time it was feared that she would bleed to death. However, she is getting along nicely now and there will be no permanent ill effects from her trying experience.

The Agricultural School at Crookston is desirous of doing everything within its power to promote the organization of Farmers' Clubs and to assist in any way possible the clubs already organized. The specialists of the school and experiment station will be glad to attend the meetings of Farmers' Clubs and to take up any subject that members with discussed. It is possible to have illustrated lectures given at evening meetings. These lectures are very interesting and instructive. If the officers of Farmers' Clubs or farmers interested in organizing a club will write to the Superintendent, Agricultural School, Crookston, he will do anything in his power to meet the requests that are made.

Rev. David V. Richardson entertained a party of young people from the farms of the vicinity at a supper and social at the Presbyterian church parlors last Friday evening. Mr. Richardson sent invitations to thirty of the young people and twenty-six responded, bringing with them good things to eat. The girls prepared a fine supper in the kitchen and after the supper had been properly disposed of the young people played games until eleven o'clock. None of the guests had been greatly acquainted with more than a half dozen of the others, but that did not prevent them from getting well acquainted and spending a delightful evening. The affair is one of several that Mr. Richardson plans to make the church more of a social center. The following young folks were in attendence:—Misses Anna Farrah, Emma Schoper, Julia Flage, Alta Scheer, Margaret Luxemburg, Edith Luxemburg, Gertie Gjerberg, Ebba Vance and Mirle Scheer, and Fred Funuh, William Carlson, Arthur Schaper, Eric Kosiba, Carl Carlson, Clarence Flage, Adam Scheer, Oliver Flage, Chas. Donkerherty, Harold Vance, Vernon Latham, Clifford Daily, Arthur Dougherty, Theman Akenson, Herman Akenson, Walter Wilkins and Elmer Nelson.

LAMBERT (OKLEE)

People are planting their sweet potato seed and some have ordered a dozen banana plants from Mexico by parcel post, but they may have to wait until the wer is over for their shipments.

Every one with any kind of a light rig has been out visiting these beautiful moonlight nights, and automobiles have been in use day and night, as the roads are almost perfect.

Henry Felderson reports the arrival of a big boy at his home Monday morning. The young man will stay right on the job now for 21 years.

Louis Strande also reports a young livery man at his home looking for a life job. All well.

Robert Rief, the young son of M. Rief, is reported out of danger and people are congratulating Dr. W. O. Tessier on his skill in bringing three typhoid-pneumonia cases safely through in one house.

F. Eller, who purchased the "Governor's" farm during the summer, has moved his family on to the farm and is fast stocking up. Mr. Eller is a progressive Wisconsin farmer and has purchased a bunch of blooded Holstein cattle from Webster Bros. at Melbeah to start his dairy herd with. We gladly welcome such men to our country.

Geo. Luckman and family of Terreboone autoed thru Lambert last Sunday enroute to the O'Neill place in Chester.

Okies will have a garage in full operation after this week. Ellis Bros. are the builders and will henceforth be able to treat all cripples in their line.

C. E. Hendlon of Webster, N. D., is fixing up the Rierson building as a pool room and hopes to have it opened up for business by January first. He will also carry a full line of jewelry and notions. This will be duly appreciated by the community at large.

The business men in the village are doing their best to get organized as an incorporated village by the first of the year. The school matter is also being settled and territory added to the village to make a district of taxable size for practical school work.

Okies has become a hay shipping point lately. About 30 car loads have been shipped so far and more is to follow. Among those shipping are L. J. O'Neil, "Gov." Pepin, Eugene Lambert and C. D. Hall, besids the hay and straw shipped by the Soren-son Bros.

Wilford Rachaud returned from Medicine Hat last week to spend a few weeks with his mother.

TERREBONNE.

Owing to the tropical weather and balmy days the past month flowers were in bloom, shrubberies budding, plants sending up new shoots, insects and snakes creeping around, new homes beginning to shed, early frosts and umbrellas were in evidence, politics and politicians seen and heard, lovers wearing smiles where frowns sometimes fit and linger under autumn's cold northern blasts, eggs are no more a luxury as every hen is now up and busy, with the cock's shrill clarion calling them on duty with the first streaks of dawn.

An occasional Mexican greaser is poking his head over the boundary line out of the battle smoke for a breath of air. Uncle Sam's fresh air back Pickaninnies eating watermelon with wooden spoons in Alabama, and Terreboone, Brooks and Lambert old maids and young advocating the new woman's rights and suffrage at the ballot box, while 11 bachelors between Okies and the Falls fracturing Mike and Tom Walsh, Stat and Tom Nash, Harry Conners, Tom Hart, Harvey and Eli St. Yves, John Supernant, Roy Fitzgerald, Geo. Pepinovet, Chas. Boyce, G. T. Kennefick, and Alf Berry are framing a handkerchief and piking for a Chinaman dressed in the shape of a homemade pair of fancy crochet eyeing slippers.

Miss Stella Mayhew has been visiting with Mr. and Mrs. Joe. Supernant and incidentally doing some trimming on the wedding trousseau of a couple of Terreboone Christmas bridegrooms.

Miss Reba Foulet, teacher in the Terreboone school, spent Saturday and Sunday with relatives at the Falls and Nelson, returning Monday evening.

The Terreboone lumber jacks, Willie Supernet, Medus and Joe Thorou Willie Gaudoze Claude Deroslier and Dan Nadeau, returned from the lumber center, Bemi, looking stout and reporting no work for lack of snow, and are all on the spot to return at the single bells' first jingle.

The house movers have landed the Kennefick house on the right spot and have returned to their homes until spring, when they will return and plant it on the basement.

Sunday evening, December 7th the stork shot over hovers Terreboone visited one of its abodes again that of Robert Okleberg, leaving them a bouncing 12 pound daughter, a sort of advance Christmas present. This is the third time in four years that the bird has perched at Bob's door, leaving one son and two daughters for him to check up to the credit side of his matrimonial venture. Bob says to let them all talk Canada with its fabulous wheat crop but Terreboone is good enough for him. Congratulations.

EMARDVILLE.

John G. Anderson was at New Richmond, Wis., to see Dr. John Till. But to good results.

Mr. Hinkle's family were visiting relatives in the Dakotas.

H. C. Hanson is busy digging a well.

Albert Priebe has just erected a wind mill on his farm.

Mrs. H. C. Hanson is sick with a bad cold.

It would be a great thing for the part of the country if the big county ditches were cut out and the same money spent on grading roads on all section lines. It would drain the country in good shape and at the same time make good roads. Too much drainage is the cause of no rain. Dampness forms dew and dew makes rain and rain makes big crops.

H. C. Hanson was a business caller at Red Lake Falls last week.

This is an unusually good winter. Many of the farmers were plowing on the 2nd day of December. It is a great winter for the stock.

Andrew Wehner returned the other day from Minneapolis where he and his relatives settled up to put the inheritances from the old country. Mr. Wehner's father died this fall.

H. C. Hanson had a dog shot by hunters that could not tell the difference between a fox and a rabbit. Such was the thanks for allowing them to hunt on the premises.

WHERE THERE'S A WILL

By MARY ROBERTS RINEHART

AUTHOR OF

The CIRCULAR STAIRCASE, The MAN IN LOWER TEN, WHEN A MAN MARRIES

ILLUSTRATED BY EDGAR BERT SMITH · COPYRIGHT BY A. SCOTT BERG CO.

SYNOPSIS.

Minnie, spring-house girl at Hope sanatorium, tells the story. It opens with the death of Mr. Pierce, millionaire. Mrs. Pierce retired to be supported by Hope's private, and the death of the old doctor who owns the sanatorium. The estate is left to a soap-factor grandson, Dicky Carter, who is to receive it on his twenty-first birthday. The sanatorium accordingly is left two months or forfeit the inheritance. A case of mumps delays Dick's arrival. Mr. Pierce's butler is hovering about in hopes of securing the place. Mrs. Pierce's brother, Arthur Arbella, and his daughter Joan, are invited upon by Van Alstyne, Dick's brother-in-law, to jeopardize the inheritance and take charge of the sanatorium until Dick arrives. They arrive, together with Patty's younger sister, Dorothy, secretive, and the couple go into hiding in the old doctor house. Visiting also are Dorothy's father, who is at the sanatorium for his health, and Patty's mother, who is in the management of the institution. Julia Summers, leading lady of Pierce's stock company, is also a guest. Dorothy is followed by Brockett, a reporter. Patty, under the incognito of Drake van Invald, arrives at the sanatorium. Barton, character man with Pierce's show and a guest at the sanatorium, is in love with Dorothy, physician. Patty, who is very much interested in Patty, shows a strong dislike for Van Invald.

CHAPTER VIII.—Continued.

The rest of the evening was quiet, and I needed it. Miss Patty and Mr. Van Invald talked by the fire and I think he told her something—not all—of the scene in the apothecaries. For she passed Mr. Pierce at the foot of the stairs on her way up for the night and she pretended not to see him.

About twelve o'clock, just after I went to my room, somebody knocked at the door. When I opened, Mr. Van Invald's valet was standing in the hall.

"I'm sorry to disturb you," he said, "but nobody seems to know where the pharmacy clerk is and I'll have to get some medicine."

"If I had my way, we'd have had a belt on that pharmacy clerk long before," I snapped, getting my keys. "Who's sick?"

"The big man," he replied. "Biggs is his name, I think, a senator or something."

I was fending the way to the stairs, but I stopped. "I might have known it," I said. "He hasn't been natural all evening. What's the matter with him? Too much fast?"

"Fast!" He laughed. "Too much feast! He's got at pretty a case of indigestion as I've seen for some time. He's lying a pronunciamento like a stage theatrical."

Well, the pharmacy was locked, and we couldn't find a key to fit it. And when I suggested mustard and warm water he jumped at the idea.

"Fine!" he said. "Better let me dish out the spring water and you get the salt, Doc! Lead on, MacDuff, to the kitchen!"

Well, I got the mustard and water ready, put out the light, and he took the things and started out, but he came back in a hurry.

"There's somebody outside talking," he said. I went in the door with him and listened at the window.

"The sooner the better," Mike was saying. "I'm no good while I've got it on my mind."

And Mr. Thoburn: "Tomorrow is too soon; they're not in the mood yet. Perhaps the day after. I'll let you know."

I didn't get to sleep until almost morning, and then it was to dream that Mr. Pierce was shouting "Hypocrites" to all the people in the sanatorium and threatening to throw plates of mustard and warm water at them.

When people went down in breakfast the next morning they found a secret hung on the front door with a half dozen new rules on it, and when I went out to the spring-house the guests were having an indignation meeting in the sun parlor, with the bishop in the chair, and Senator Biggs, so wealthy he could hardly stand, making a speech.

I tried to see Mr. Pierce, but early as it was, he had gone for a walk, taking Arabella with him. So I called a conference at the shelter-house—Miss Patty, Mr. and Mrs. Van Alstyne, Mr. and Mrs. Dick and myself.

We were in a tight place and we knew it.

"He is making it as hard for us as he can," Mrs. Stan declared. "The idea of moving the cardroom lights put out at midnight, and the breakfast room closed at ten! Nobody gets up at that hour."

"His was to come here by rule," I reminded her coldly, "and by rule, Dick, he can't be—well, he gave 'em at well!"

But Miss Patty was always fair.

"I teache him," she asserted. "I want to quarrel with him the minute I see him. He—he is preeminent to the point of imperticence—but he's honest; he thinks we're all hypocrites—those that are well and those that are sick or think they are—and he hates hypocrisy."

"You and old Pierce would make a fine team, Pat," Mr. Stan observed with a yawn. "I like hypocrites myself. They're so comfy. But if you're not show advice, Pat, you'll have Aunt Hoorie break her neck or something—anything to get father back to town. Something is going to explode, and Oskar doesn't like to be exploded."

She curled up on the cot with that and went sound asleep. The rest of us had coffee and talked, but there wasn't anything to do. As Mr. Stan said, Mr. Pierce didn't want to play, Mr. Thoburn and as likely as not if we went to him in a body and told him we must come to the shelter-house for instruction, and he stare and smile when he was called down by the guests about the stolen pipes making a racket, he'd probably prefer to go down to the village and take Doctor Bermes' place washing dishes at the station.

But he settled it by appearing himself. He came across the snow from the direction of Mount Hope, and he had a plaid mackinaw over his shoulder. (At that time I didn't even know the name of the things, but I learned enough about them later.) I must say I'm looked very well beside Mr. Dick, who wasn't very large, anyhow, and who hadn't had time to put on his collar, and Mr. Stan, who as always thin and sallow and never takes a step he doesn't have to.

I let him in, and when he saw us all there he started and hesitated.

"Come in, Pierce," Mr. Stan said. "We've just been talking about you."

He came in, but he didn't look very comfortable.

"What have you decided to do with me?" he asked. "Am I under the strain?"

Of course, he had to be sat right about the sanatorium, and Mr. Stan began it. Mr. Pierce listened, sitting on the floor and looking puzzled and more and more unhappy. Finally he got up and drew a long breath.

"Exactly," he agreed "I know you are all right and I'm wrong—according to your way of thinking. But if those people want to be well, why should I encourage them to do the wrong thing? They don't want to be well; they're all hypocrites."

"That's not the point, Pierce," Mr. Dick broke in impatiently. "The point is to come here for orders and you haven't given 'em. You're running this place for me, not for yourself."

Mr. Pierce looked at Mr. Dick and from there to Mr. Stan and smiled.

"I did come," he explained. "I came twice, don't you know, with new directions. I lost all the money I'd had in advance. Honestly," he confessed, "I felt I couldn't afford to come every day."

Miss Patty got up. "We are talking around the question," she said. "Mr. Pierce understands, he manages his sanatorium, and to try to manage it successfully, he cannot do that without making some attempt at conciliating the guests. It's—it's absurd to antagonize them."

"Exactly," he said cordially. "I was in a measure trying to try to do it according. I'm sorry my methods don't agree with the approval of this—executive committee. But it might as well be clear that I intend to use my own methods—or none."

Well, what could we do? Miss Patty tried to understand, to manage the scene to put us on the side of the mildly spring that morning.

"Curious old world, isn't it?" she said, between us. "Here we are—the three of us—snug and nice, having these kinds of bad-luke waters and not having to pay for it; three meals a day and afternoon tea ditto, good beds and steam-heat ditto—and four days ago where were we? Pierce, you were living in your clothes! Dick, you were in the grip of the Lord knows mercy on his soul!"

I tried to get out in time, but I was too late. I saw her eyes on the plate of water at her elbow roll over and remain on the floor, and saw her chest wildly at Mr. Pierce's shoulder.

"—poor Dicky Carter!" she cried. "Richard—they call him Dick." Mr. Pierce said uneasily, and lessened her grip on his shoulder.

Oh, well, everybody knows it now—how she called Mr. Dick everything in the calendar, and then began to cry and said nobody would ever know what they'd been through to her, and how very three she had on was a part of the treasures she'd had made, and what with the dressmaker's bills—Suddenly she stopped crying.

"Nat—Not Dicky Carter!" She Cried.

"Where is he now?" she demanded.

"All we are aware at," Mr. Pierce replied politely, "is that he is not at the sanatorium."

We looked at us all closely, but she got nothing from my face.

"Oh, very well," she said, shrugging her shoulders, "I'll wait until he shows up. It doesn't cost anything."

Then, with one of her easy changes, she laughed and picked up her mur mur.

"Minnie and I," she said, "will tend her here, and in our leisure moments we will pour sulphur water on a bunch of Dicky's letters that I have to coo l tell you, Minnie, if I ever get away from Hope, I'll—"

"You've got to get away this minute," I broke in, remembering. "They'll be here any minute to be shaved."

He got up and looked around him helplessly.

"Where'll I go?" he asked. "I can't go back to the shelter-house."

I looked at him and he tried to grin

"Fact," he said, "hard to believe, but—Dick, Stan, they've shut me out. He's a Pierce in here, and that I can spoil the little game by calling the extra sex, if I want to."

When she was safely gone I brought Mr. Dick out to the fire. His water would not speak to him.

Mike went to Mr. Pierce that day and asked him to shave himself. He did not get it. Perhaps as things have turned out, it was for the best, but it is strange to think how different things would have been if he'd been shaved. He was in jail, of course, for six months for malicious mischief, but by that time the damage was done.

CHAPTER X.

That was on a Saturday morning. It had stopped snowing and the sun was shining brightly, though it said that the snow blew like powder. By eleven o'clock every sna who could get a horse was on the road.

About twelve o'clock Mr. Thoburn came to the shelter-house and the bishop left Arabella. The women made a fuss over the creature and fed her cake, and when I tried to put her out everybody objected. So she stayed, and Miss Summers put her through a lot of tricks, while the man crowded around.

Mr. von Invald and Miss Patty came in just then and stood watching.

"And now," said Mr. von Invald, "I propose, as a reward to Miss Arabella, to fight me now. I have three children."

"But I' said the advocate, with a peaceful and joyous smile, 'I have now got five."

"Foolish Position."

"They are to be a foolish pooh, pooh lion," said Simeon Ford, the New York humorist, apropos of the situation in the Balkans. "Their position is very much like a crowd.

"A friend dropped in on Brown the other night, to find him engaged in a poker game with four bibulous fellows. Bottles and glasses were everywhere and cigar stubs littered the table and costly Persian rug. Mrs. Brown, of course, was at the theatre.

"Brown," said the visitor severely, 'what would you say if your wife saw you now?'

"'Goodness gracious, my prayers!' Brown exclaimed, in an awed voice.

Japanese Woman Runs Bank.

Miss. Kin Sano, the only woman who has obtained the position of bank president in Japan, acted in founding the institution in 1913. The bank is situated in Tokyo, and in handing her aid to its foundation Miss. Sano realized the wishes of her husband, who died a number of years ago. She was born in 1843, conversed well in English, and has acquired many European customs, but still clings to her native costume.

TUNNY IN BRITISH WATERS

Large Specimen of the Fish Weighing 715 Pounds Is Caught and Put on Exhibition.

London.—A large specimen of the short-finned tunny (orcynus thynnus) was recently captured off the southwest coast of Ireland by one of the Fleetwood trawlers when trawling for cod, who brought in their home port, and it was afterwards sent, as a stop attraction, to Preston, where the writer had the opportunity of examining it. The fish in question weighed 715 pounds and measured six feet six inches in length, and is the largest of its species ever brought to Fleetwood. The tunny belongs to the mackerel family, having somewhat the appearance of a gigantic mackerel, and is a rare visitor to British waters. It is a southern fish, particularly abundant in the Mediterranean, where the fisheries are of great antiquity, and is in daily much in demand for its edible qualities in the countries bordering on that sea. The Phoenicians established extensive fisheries for tunny, and as an indication of their value the tunny appears on the medels of Cadiz and Carteia. Unfortunately the fish's scales have shown is wrinkled in the lower portion of the body, owing to its not being bolsted clear of the ground when being photographed, and the fish is lying flat on its side, consequently wrinkling it. A tunny weighing three and a half hundredweight, was caught in Cardigan bay and another specimen of the same species said to be "just under 12 feet in length," and weighing six and a half hundredweight, was caught in the North sea and landed at East Coast fishing ports during the month of September this year. The Mediterranean tunny is allied to the tuna at the California coast, and both these fish may be obtained in the country preserved in tins.

RATTLER OBJECTED TO PLAN

Refused to Furnish Colorado Girl With a Snake Belt and a Tragedy Is Averted.

Denver, Colo.—Her anxiety to have a rattlesnake skin belt almost cost the life of Miss Grace Glaspool when the reptile refused to give up and suddenly showed itself very much alive and active.

Miss Glaspool was out riding when she came across a rattler stretched itself in the highway. The girl alighted from the buggy and attacked the snake with the whip, succeeding in killing it. She placed it in the vehicle and drove off.

When she pulled the snake from its hiding she fell to the ground, coiling and striking at her. Her heavy riding skirt caught the fangs, probably saving her life. She succeeded in killing it with a hatchet and Miss Glaspool still has hopes of eventually owning a snake belt.

ENGLISH TAKE UP DOMINOES

Old Game Provides Stop-Gap Between Afternoon Tea and Dinner for Britishers.

London.—Many society hostesses are now providing dominoes for evening some new form of entertainment, especially in the short space of time between afternoon tea and dinner. Consequently there is now a distinct revival of dominoes.

Some of the dominoes are extremely handsome, the finest quality of mother of pearl, while the boxes hold them are equally ornate. The completely dominoes had died out in England to the fact that nowadays could not find anyone among their parties who could play the game.

DECLARES MONEY IS SCARCE

Missouri Pacific President Denies Road is Buying Electric Locomotives.

Kansas City.—"We're not buying anything. Money is so scarce you can't even get a nickel to appease. There will have to change before this road will make any additions."

This is the statement B. F. Bush, president of the Missouri Pacific railroad, made when he was asked if the purchase of the Antioch electric line in California had been closed while he was in the west.

Mr. Bush did not deny that the Missouri Pacific might purchase it in the future.

MRS. HARRISON REFUSES JOB

Wife of the Mayor of Chicago Declines Position in Service of United States.

Washington.—Mrs. Carter H. Harrison, wife of the mayor of Chicago, recently declined an appointment as a member of the commission on industrial relations. The reason given is that Mayor Harrison opposed it on the ground that Mrs. Harrison has certain duties as wife of the mayor of such a large city which cannot be neglected.

Milady in Gold Attire

JUST as gorgeous and just as beautiful as it can be, this gown is one of the many wonderful gold shades shown the cleverest handling of the most extreme ideas to this winter's modes.

The skirt of panne velvet of the softest and most supple variety is made on the "turkish trouser" model. About all its fullness is arranged at the front. There is no mistaking the appearances it makes so the wearer. It looks actually more like a pair of voluminous trousers than like our ordinary skirts.

The pannier and bodice in one, with soft crushed girdle of velvet, is a wonderful garment. The drapery is arranged in two over-hanging panniers, broadening the hips and hanging into the figure at the bottom. The bodice is cut with a kimono sleeve, apparently, although it is held to be sure of this. At all events, the arm-eye is not discernible in it. The sleeve is lengthened until it covers the wrist and extends in a point over the back of the hand. Such sleeves are the height of style.

This costume is an achievement of which the designer has a right to be proud. It manages difficult problems of dropping to the best view. There is a pretty flchu of net worn under the bodice, and a standing ruff about the neck. A flash of long drops of jewels or velvet ribbon in a narrow width is placed at the termination of the neck ruff at each side.

One cannot help wondering at and admiring the lovely turban which finishes this toilette. A length of soft fur, or plush, appears to be wrapped about the head and provided with the narrowest of supporting brims at one side. Poised at the center is the body and head of a wingless butterfly used as an ornament would be unforgivable except that the gorgeous creature is gold in the veil butterfly which fect his velvet fly ship is proclaiming at the top of his—turban.

The pretty dialogue of the Sir Toby Belch, declined it a serious one, take to omit several important battles west of the Alleghenies. "The capture of Vicksburg was quite as decisive as Gettysburg," said he, "and there were several other battles that should not be omitted from any history, such as that of Nashville, which broke Hood's army and cleared the way for the march to the sea. In the early years of the war we only once had successes were in the west, and but for them the northern people would have had no good news for years."

PLAN DEMOCRATIC JUBILEE

May Select Jackson Day for Big Love Feast and Get-together Celebration.

St. Paul.—Minnesota democrats will have a get-together dinner this winter, and the data selected may be Jackson day, Jan. 7, conference with the date chosen by the national heads of the party for a nation-wide celebration. The achievements of the Wilson administration are to be the topics for a congratulation. "We have had the subject under consideration for some time," said Fred B. Lynch of St. Paul, democratic national committeeman. "We will undoubtedly have a democratic dinner during the winter which will be a rally for the state democracy. We may decide to have it on Jackson day."

Two Accidents at Lake City.

Lake City—John Busch, a young farmer living at Hay creek, near here, while slighting from the fast mail train at the St. Paul depot here, fell beneath the wheels. His right leg was severed just above the ankle. It was removed to the Wabasha hospital. In the afternoon, Leo Neumann, a brakeman employed by the Soo road, had his right arm crushed while making a coupling. The wound was dressed and he was taken to his home at Wilson.

Children Try to Rough It.

Minneapolis.—Vague hopes on castles of adventure, faint girlish instincts of home-making, translated to definite plan in childish minds by a moving picture film, sent Donald Morton, 12, and his sister, Viola, 11, stealthily from home Monday evening to pioneer alone in a little cottage in the woods for two days, tell, romance them, they came trudging home. They are the children of James H. Morton. The children brought with a tie kit of food Monday night and disappeared.

State News of General Interest

VETERANS OPPOSE EDUCATORS' PLAN

PROTEST MOVE TO "SOIL DOWN" HISTORY OF CIVIL WAR FOR SCHOOL USE.

SOME EXPRESS DISAPPROVAL

Mistaken Plan to Placate South Says Levi Longfellow, Patriotic Instructor—Not Compulsory, Says State Superintendent.

Minneapolis.—Minnesota civil war veterans will not see the school histories "boiled down" in their accounts of the great conflict, as proposed by a committee of the Minnesota Educational association, without a protest.

The Recommendation.

The committee, which is headed by S. A. Challman, state graded school inspector has reported a course of study in United States history for elementary grades, which omits mention of all battles of the civil war except that of Gettysburg, and the fight between the Monitor and the Merrimac. This course is not to be made compulsory, State Superintendent C. Schiks said, but is merely to be recommended.

Opposition of the veterans was expressed by Levi Longfellow, who is national patriotic instructor of the Grand Army of the Republic.

"That's all wrong," said Mr. Longfellow. "That would be a great history, wouldn't it? I believe this is part of the movement to eliminate the civil war from our school histories, a movement which has originated in the south, and has been fevored by some northern people. Four or five years ago the secretary of the Chicago school board proposed that the civil war be cut out of the histories used in school, in order to placate the south and lead to better feeling. That is wholly e wrong idea.

Would Teach Truth.

"There is no more offensive in the teaching of the civil war story to the young people or wa stenography in teaching is in the interest of truth, to have the facts of history understood by our younger generation. The people of the south thought they were right and waged a good fight, but the war is over, and it is for us today to apply the lessons. If we forget the past, wa ignore the greatest teacher we can ever have. Even now, the histories we have in schools deal meagerly with the facts of the period."

Former Governor S. R. Van Sant, whose civil war service was in the infantry, declared it a serious step

11 YEAR OLD HEN WINS OUT

Fowl Which Won Prize As a Pullet Features Exhibit at Rochester.

Rochester. — The most successful show ever held by the Southern Minnesota Poultry association was that of last week. The exhibit was featured by the entry of a Rhode Island Red hen which was first prize as a pullet at the Minneapolis show eleven years ago.

Over 500 birds were exhibited this year, and the exhibit of Rhode Island Reds were the largest ever known in the state. Judge Ralph Whitney declared that it was the best exhibit ever seen in this section of the state, quality and size of birds being far superior to previous years.

At the annual meeting of the association, J. A. Gates was elected president P. L. Williams, vice president and Fred Boyd, secretary J. W. Flathers, treasurer; W. J. Snellinger, superintendent; E. Mowry, assistant superintendent; A. B. Williams, W. N. Williams, A. F. Hilbourne, Meyer Thompson and John Robertson, directors.

Mrs. John A. Johnson to Wed.

St. Paul.—Mrs. John A. Johnson, widow of the late Governor Johnson, will on Christmas day become the bride of William Alley Smith, formerly of Minneapolis, who now lives in Pittsburgh. Tha announcement caused little surprise among the friends of Mrs. Johnson, who have known of the couple's engagement for some time. Mr. Smith is a prominent figure in the banner of Minneapolis and was for a time master of years engaged in business there.

Laverne, Minn., Dec. 6.—Agnes Mosher and Lena Hickey, 16 and 14 years old respectively, are in a dangerous condition from taking rat poison.

Finds Potatoes Are Unharmed.

Crookston.—Farmers who have spuds are back and practically all of the spuds are now here. Fish are reported to be sprawling in the rivers and streams as a result of the freeze. The fishermen at Lake of the Woods and Rainy lake. Motor boats are running in the river and are scheduled to end Sunday to the new dam. While plowing up a potato field that has been plowed had been ruined by frost, Andrew Sjodahl of Climax discovered that only a few of the tubers closest to the surface had been damaged.

Wells Host to Ministers.

Wells.—The annual district conference of the Mankato district met in this city on Monday and Tuesday. Addresses were made by many of the pastors. Rev. G. A. Cahoon, district superintendent, presided.

New Stock Association Elects.

Fergus Falls.—The newly organized Holstein-Friesian Breeders' association of Otter Tail county held a meeting at Fergus Falls and elected A. R. Knutson, Pelican Rapids, president.

ACCUSE EX-STATE TREASURER

Mismanagement of Corporation By Former State Official and Associates Is Charge.

Duluth.—In an affidavit filed with the St. Louis county district court by James A. Wharton of this city, attorney for the incorporated United States and Dominion Life insurance company of Duluth, it is charged that Julius H. Block, former state treasurer, and two associates, Otto A. Rabe and John N. Swenson, managed the affairs of the company and "ruined its credit." The affidavit asks that certain judgments against the corporation, secured by default, be vacated and that it be allowed to reopen the case and introduce an answer.

Mr. Wharton in his affidavit says the company was organized in 1912 and the only meeting of directors or stockholders until Sept. 1, 1913 was on April 15 of that year, when J. H. Block, then the president, with Rabe and Swenson, directors, entered into a contract with the company by which "all the assets of the company were sailed, and appropriated by said Block, Rabe and Swenson, and that the company received nothing at the consideration of said contract." The affidavit says the terms of the contract never were fulfilled and that, from the time of making it until Jan. 1, 1913, Block refused to reveal anything concerning the affairs of the company to its stockholders, but on this contrary "will fully misrepresented the true condition of said company."

EXPERIMENT WITH WHEAT

Earlier Minnesota Grains in the Aim of Agricultural College Experts.

St. Paul.—Experiments intended to develop earlier varieties of wheat and corn, suited to the climate of Minnesota, are expected to be carried on at the agricultural college with better results next year, when the new greenhouse will be available for the work. With the greenhouse it will be possible to raise two crops of these cereals in a year, and the experiments can be carried on much more rapidly. "We expect to get a good deal of the work in the way of breeding corn for earliness," said T. B. Hutcheson, associate director of the experiment station. "The ordinary way to get varieties that will mature early is to plant late in the field the ears that mature earliest and using them for seed. With the new greenhouse we will be able to do more experimental work in the way of breeding for early varieties.

"Wheat will be another cereal that we will experiment on. If we could get wheat acclimated so that a lot of wheat would ripen earlier it would be an advantage to the farmers in that they wouldn't have so much work to do in the rush season."

MIDDLE RIVER HAS BIG FIRE

Mice Start Blaze Which Destroys Three Blocks at Loss of $30,000.

Middle River.—Fire in the B. F. Benson building was discovered early by the families on the second floor through the suffocating smoke that filled the apartments. By the time the occupants had reached the ground, the whole building was burning and the flames spread quickly to adjoining buildings those of the Middle River Hardware company and Henry Young's general store.

The fire department responded quickly to the first alarm, but the fire had gained such headway it could not be checked. The three buildings burned to the ground with their contents, and the total loss is estimated at more than $30,000 with less than half insurance. The origin of the blaze was blowing and carried the flames away from other business property.

The fire has been traced in the ballot of some persons to mice working in the basement of the Benson building, which was used by Henry Young for storage of his merchandise.

TRI-COUNTY BREEDERS' UNION

Lyon, Redwood and Murray County Farmers Organize to Buy More Stock.

Tracy.—A tri-county stock breeders' association has been organized at Revere Saturday. The counties in the organization are Lyon, Redwood and Murray, of which Tracy is a center.

The object is to promote the cooperative breeding and handling of pure-bred and high-grade Holstein dairy stock. To improve the stock of the three counties and to further development is the object of the association.

Professor A. D. Wilson and Mr. Mc-Carrow of the extension service of the agricultural college, addressed the meeting. Officers elected were: Jr. Kruger, president, Tracy; J. T. Andrews, Tracy, vice president; John Mc-Lean, Lyon, secretary. The first sale for an executive committee composed of these officers and S. V. Fielding, Redwood Falls; Mr. Grim, Slayton, and P. H. WALLACE-FOSSEEN LAW VALID

District Court Holds Abatement Act Is Wholly Constitutional.

Minneapolis.—Every provision of the Wallace-Fosseen abatement law was upheld and declared constitutional by Judge Joseph W. Molyneaux in the district court, who, after passing on the case on appeal, issued a temporary injunction against Ralph Bowers, 16 Washington avenue N, second floor, restraining the operation for five days of nuisance until an abatement action is heard.

A temporary order with similar provisions was already in force.

Lauds Co-operative Community Clubs.

Bemidji.—B. B. Jewell, county agricultural agent of Kewaskum county, believes in co-operative community clubs. At the annual meeting of the Northern Minnesota Development association here he pointed out that such clubs can do many things which would not be done were the people not brought together occasionally for a common purpose. "Such clubs," he said, "give communities a chance to get acquainted with the needs, problems and successes."

GREAT POSSIBILITIES OF LITTLE FARMS

In Readiness.

(By L. M. BENNINGTON.)

In developing methods to get the best possible results from a farm of 40 acres I have found it necessary to give careful attention to soil conservation. Long ago I became a firm believer in the feasibility of double cropping, but this system will soon exhaust the land unless a thorough application of manure is provided every year and an intelligent schems of rotation is adopted.

Either in operating a small dairy or raising stock for market one must be prepared to feed through frequent periods of summer drought.

This is absolutely necessary if the milk output is maintained on a basis that will fulfill contracts. Corn comes late in the fall and in addition to this the winter supply of hay must be provided. Summer feeding seems to be of awe-increasing importance in dairy districts. Then the growing scarcity or advancing value of land constitutes another question. It needs little argument to show that we ought to improve our farming land and, if possible, accomplish as much on 40 acres as formerly we did on 80 or 100.

I have secured practical results by sowing rye for fodder. This crop is ready to cut and stock late in May and if it can be followed with millet, going the latter into the ground by July 1. Then the farmer comes face to face with the problem of soil exhaustion. It would not be wise to repeat that process the next season, but it is practicable to seed that field to clover as soon as the millet is taken off. This will rest the soil and restores its qualities. It should be devoted to clover for a couple of seasons. After that it is fit for almost any crop. If the ground needs seeding in the fall it can be put in with a nurse crop of oats in the spring.

When a field has produced corn for two seasons it might well be seeded to oats and vetch this year as taken off it could profitably be followed with fodder corn the same season. Three years would give land a pretty severe trial, but it would be thoroughly restored by devoting it to clover for two years. Liberal applications of manure are of vital importance.

In carrying out this double crop principle it is well to follow early potatoes with peas, or follow any ordinary potato crop with fodder corn. After reseeding this for a couple of seasons seed with clover. Oats and peas togethermake a good forage for cows and hogs, the animals to be turned in when the crop is green. A patch of artichokes or rape will help the growth and quality of hogs.

By keeping up such a variety as this a farmer on 40 acres can successfully handle a dairy of ten cows and raise 25 to 30 hogs every year. He ought also to have three or four mares and a couple of hundred chickens, besides a garden and some fruit. Methods can be varied to suit location, market advantages, soil characteristics and labor conditions. In these little farm propositions one aim must be to distribute the work evenly over the season, that the time of asparagus and rhubarb in the spring until the last winter apple is picked there should be something fresh for market every day.

HAND FEEDING FOR THE SMALL CALVES

The Kind of a Herd Produced by Raising the Calves of the Best Cows.

(By EDWARD C. GLETHER.)

If we start a calf out right in the first year of its life it will ever be a profitable animal; but if we do not give him a fair start he will start at best, be a worthless scrub, consuming much more feed than he will ever pay for.

It is much more profitable for the farmer to put flesh on a young calf than it is to half feed him when he is full grown. Let us see how we can feed all the gain when he is fitted for the market.

Nature never intended the calf to be raised by hand, and we must at the outset take a physical makeup quite well if we wish to succeed by hand feeding.

Where the calf-is hand fed it is only natural to suppose that it receives skimmed milk, because the cream is the one object for which the cow is milked.

Where any number of calves are to be raised by hand it is best to prepare a set of movable stanchions. These are quickly made from one by four inch lumber, and where they are movable they can be changed from place to place to suit the convenience of the feeder.

After the calves are in the stanchions it is an easy manner to dish out a quantity of milk to each individual without being continually pestered by the others.

After they all have their milk they should be provided with finely ground corn meal, or better bran, and they will soon form a habit of taking their chop after each meal and so forget about the teat habit of ear-sucking.

When they have finished their feed they should be turned out on a meadow where they can exercise and they will soon begin to nibble grass and so get some nourishment.

The main object in raising calves is to keep them continually growing. It is easier to put on a pound of gain when they are young than when they are older.

Methods of Feeding Fowls.

Fowls should have simply creep in the morning, and the crops should never be quite full until it is time to go to roost at night. For the first week, and scattered in the litter early in the morning is preferred, the sooner the better after the birds leave the roosts.

This induces them to exercise, which is especially important on cold winter mornings. In the middle of the day a warm, moistened mash should be given, and at night, about an hour before they go to roost, a liberal feed of grain should be scattered in the litter.

Alfalfa and Sweet Clover.

Where it is difficult to obtain a stand of alfalfa it is quite possible sowing sweet clover a year or two before seeding to alfalfa would prove advantageous. Sweet clover will increase the fertility and put it into good condition for seeding alfalfa.

Beasts Becoming Hungry.

When the cold weather comes the appetites of people, such as skunks, weasels and cats, are deprived of their natural prey of field mice and make extra efforts to get at the chickens. See that your fowls are shut up safely each night, or some morning you will find some of them missing.

Feed for Cows.

Four quarts of good oats mixed with warm water makes a fine feed to be fed to cows just after the new calf comes.

Salt for Cows.

When cows are salted only once a week they eat too much at a time and it causes looseness of the bowels. They will eat a little salt nearly every day if it is kept where they can get at it, especially when the grass is fresh and abundant.

Feeding Roughage.

Feed roughage to the stock before giving them grain; as it invigorates and excites the digestive apparatus to action.

CREPE AND CHIFFON FOR ACCESSORIES THAT MATCH HAT

IN keeping with the ideas of the season, which show a preference for muffs and neck pieces to match the hat, crepe has been utilized to make very chic accessories to be worn with mourning millinery. The most popular fashions in hats, as to shape and decoration, lend themselves with unusual appropriateness to this material.

The crepe set of three pieces, hat, muff and scarf, shown in this picture, illustrates how successfully the beautiful fabric may be used in this way. Except for the silk lining of the muff, no other material is required to make and trim the several pieces, except a strip of rather heavy chiffon which forms the scarf. The ornaments on each piece are fashioned of the crepe.

Color Contrast.

Sometimes no color contrast is to be found in a dress. And then this dainty woman provides it by the flower which she tucks into the corsage or waist. Sometimes she chooses a single rose in flaming scarlet, at others a posey in glorious purple, and again a huge bunch of violets or a spray of delicate orchids in curious browns and yellows. Or, eschewing color, she takes a large clematis in smooth white velvet and, thrusting it into the front of her coat, endows her whole costume with a note of originality, and so achieves success.

Aprons for Children.

The cotton aprons, bound with blue strips of plak or blue lawn, and stamped with a simple design to be embroidered in cottlie stitch, are sold for 49 cents. They are for children. They are cut on all-accordion line, and would make edmirable play aprons. There are deep pockets across the bottom and straps that button on the shoulders.

The small round hat with slightly rolling brim is covered with the material put on smoothly. The crown is small and puffed, and the odd standing ornament is made of a beamed strip of crepe wrapped about a supporting wire and ruffled about it at the top.

The scarf is only a plain length of chiffon with its edges finished with a wide border of crepe. The ends are gathered and finished with an ornament made of folds of crepe and finished with a bound scarf end of the fabric. This is a strip of the material bound with a narrow bias fold of crepe like that which trims the muff.

A ready made muff bed lined with black silk and covered with it as an interlining makes the construction of the muff a simple matter. Five deep folds of crepe are plaited over each side and sewed down at the ends. A strip bound of the material is brought across the top, tacked down one side, covering the ends of the plaits and tied in a knot with hanging end as a fnish.

The set is as handsome as anyone could wish and only ordinary skill in sawtoe is required to make it.

JULIA BOTTOMLEY.

Freshening Furs.

Any fur coat, muff or neck piece that needs freshening up may be greatly improved in appearance, full ply by brushing with a soft brush and water, to which one tablespoonful of pure alcohol has been added for every quart. Always brush with the nap of the fur. When white or light-colored furs have become soiled they may be cleaned easily in gasoline.

Ribbon Sets.

Detachable sleeve trimmings to match the waist garniture are easily made and afford a desirable way of rejuvenating a last season's blouse. Ribbon sets are delightful bits of work for leisure moments and quite transform an otherwise plain waist.

New Stockings.

Stockings are made with anklets of embroidery or beads or rhinestones. They seem fantastic, but are really no more so than the now accepted rhinestone studded heels which were laughed at when they made their first appearance here last winter.

FINE NEW CHURCH FOR GENTILLY

AND ELECTRIC ROAD TO RED LAKE FALLS SAYS CROOKS-TON TIMES.

Beginning early in the spring a new Catholic church will be built in Gentilly to cost about $20,000, for the superstructure only and when complete it will cost at least $25,000. The church will be built of Menominee brick on the outside and the rest of the material will come from Crookston, only the finishing brick coming from without this locality. Father Thillien of Gentilly is pushing this project right along and it will be complete within the course of next summer.

As Gentilly is becoming more of a delaying and farm produce shipping point, talk reveals that a railroad will be built through there within the course of a year or two. It is also rumored that an electric line will be built from this city to Gentilly and through to Red Lake Falls by next fall.—Crookston Times.

RED LAKE FALLS, RED LAKE COUNTY, MINNESOTA, THURSDAY, DECEMBER 25, 1913. VOL. XXXI—No. 13.

DOES RED LAKE COUNTY WANT A COUNTY AGENT?

TRAINED MAN TO ADVISE WITH FARMERS MAY BE SECURED.

STATE WILL PAY A THOUSAND DOLLARS OF ANNUAL EXPENSE.

Do the people of Red Lake county, the farmers and business men, want a county agent?—an agriculturist who knows business shall be (the year around)dvising with the farmers regarding farm problems?

Red Lake county may have such a man if action is taken without delay. The last Legislature provided for state aid to twenty-five counties and for ten more counties next year. Twenty-five counties now have county agents and one has applied for the next year. There is no doubt that by the time the aid for next year is available nine more applications will be on file, so if an agent for Red Lake county is desired it will be necessary that action be taken soon.

The county commissioners of each county receiving the aid of one thousand dollars must appropriate an equal amount for the work and additional funds come from private sources. Red Lake county being small it is probable that the two thousand dollars would almost cover the annual expense of having a county agent.

The Christmas number of The Farmer contains the story of the remarkable results accomplished in those counties having agents,the profit to the farmers being many times as much as the expense for the county agent. The story occupies several pages of the magazine, which is much more space than the Gazette can devote to the subject at this time. However, the introductory statement by A. B. Wilson, state leader of county agents, offers an explanation of how the work is conducted. His statement is as follows:

Organization of the Work.—County Agent work is conducted cooperatively between the county, the state and the national government, so that all forms of Extension work done in the county are in this way united. The County Agents are appointed by the College of Agriculture and are directly responsible to that institution. Each group of County Agents is supervised by a joint representative of the Agricultural College and the U. S. Department of Agriculture.

The County Agent Not an Expert.—In some places the County Agent is erroneously called an expert. The County Agent is not an expert; he is really an agricultural agent representing the Agricultural College, the U. S. Department of Agriculture and the agricultural interests of the county. His mission is to locate the problems of the county in which he is working, help to solve any of them that he can personally, and then to bring to his assistance the information of the specialists in the U. S. Department and the Agricultural College, so that if there is any available information on the subject it can be utilized on the problems in the county.

Requirements for County Agents.—There are three general qualifications required of County Agents before they are appointed, namely: first, practical farm experience; second, suitable technical training; and, third, sincere interest in farm work. With these three qualifications, coupled with good sense and agreeable personality, a County Agent can succeed.

Appropriations for County Agent Work.—In 1913 our Legislature in Minnesota appropriated $25,000 for the fiscal year ending July 31st, 1914 and $25,000 for the succeeding year, to aid in the employment of County Agricultural Agents, this fund to be distributed in amounts not to exceed $1,000 per county to the counties first qualifying. The same bill allows the County Commissioners of any county to appropriate not to exceed $1,000 per year toward the County Agent work.

The experience to date indicates that the expenses of an Agricultural Agent will amount to about $1800 per year where the man is equipped with an automobile, as practically all agents should be and are. County Agents' salaries vary all the way from $1,500 up to $2,000. So, in addition to the $1,000 state appropriation and the $1,000 county appropriation, there is needed from $100 to $500 local or citizens' fund additional to secure large enough sum to cover both the salary and expense.

Disbursement of Fund.—All expenditures of County Agent work must be approved by the Dean of the Minnesota College of Agriculture and paid out through the auditor. The state fund is paid out toward the salary of the County Agent at the rate of $83.33 per month. In some cases the U. S. Department is paying from $10 to $20 per month toward the County Agent, but until July 1st, 1914, there will be no additional funds from this source. The balance of the County Agent's salary is usually paid out of the fund appropriated by the County Commissioners through the regular county officials on bills approved by the Dean of the Agricultural College. The expense incurred during each month of the County Agent is itemized and approved by the Dean before it is paid.

Present Situation in Minnesota.—There are 23 County Agents now in the field. One county is ready for the appointment of an agent; two other counties have secured the appropriation from their County Commissioners, and have not raised the necessary local fund. As soon as these two counties have obtained there will be room for no more counties to be added until August 1, 1914, when the increased appropriation will permit 25 counties, or 10 additional counties.

CHIEF PAUL BRUNELLE.

At Banquet Monday Evening Mayer Announced His Appointment.

At the banquet given for Mr. Crombe Monday evening Mr. Lemieux made the statement that since there were so many citizens present who considered the occasion opportune to announce his appointment of a successor to Fred Cyr, chief of police, who had tendered his resignation to take effect Jan. 1, 1914. The mayor then announced that Paul Brunelle was to have the city job. Mr. Brunelle, who was a guest at the banquet, was given a round of applause and responded to the demand for a "speech."

The appointment will be generally accepted as a men very well fitted for the place and there is no doubt that he will give the city efficient service.

NEW OFFICERS AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY

THEY WITH DIRECTORS WILL HAVE CHARGE OF COUNTY FAIR FOR 1914.

The members of the board of directors of the Red Lake County Agricultural society met last Thursday evening and elected the officers who with the board of directors will have charge of the Red Lake county fair to be given in the fall of 1914. The new officers are:

President—P. B. Gagne.
Vice President—C. O. Ehnkel.
Secretary—Jos. Solley.
Treasurer—J. D. Hession.

The work of preparing the premium list will be taken up very soon so that the list may be ready for circulation early in the season.

WHY MILLER HESITATATES.

Frankly Admits He's After the Easy Money First.

"Friends of Walter Miller firmly believe that the little Polo will not permit the declaration of Walter Ketonen, the conqueror of Chris Jordon to pass unanswered. Miller has often told us that there was no man in the world at 158 pounds that he could not defeat nor that he feared in the least.

I'Ketonen says that Miller is afraid to meet him. Ketonen says further that he would like nothing better than to wrestle Miller with all of the purse going to the winner.

"Friends of Walter hope that he will come back at the Finnish chauvinism and prove that he fears no man of his weight in the world."

The above statement by the sporting editor of the Duluth Herald will be of interest to local men here who have recently been enlightened as to why Miller refuses to meet men in Ketonen's class.

Curtis, the Halstad wonder, backed by local fans, challenged the winner of the Miller-"Young Hock" match at Grand Forks last Friday night. Curtis has put away many good men who have made Miller go to the limit and has earned a recognized place in the wrestling game.

When forced to respond to the Curtis challenge after stealing "Hock" Miller made a frank statement of his position. Though he bet the underweight Dick, Miller is still welterweightchampion. He says that he has outlined a program and he is going to attick to. He is going to put Curby all of the welterweight men of standing and then he's going back after the middleweight championship and take on every man of known ability including Curtis. To make a break in his announced program and take on a man like Curtis would be too strenuous an undertaking if not actually dangerous. Mr. Miller believes that his program is good business. That is evident.

NEW MANAGER FOR LOTUS THEATRE

W. H. GILLFILLIAN HAS BOUGHT FIXTURES AND LEASED BUILDING.

W. H. Gilfillian, proprietor of the Red Room billiard parlor, is the manager of the Lotus Theatre in this city. Mr. Gilfillian this week purchased the motion picture machine and fixtures and secured a long-time lease of the building. Mr. Gilfillian will put on a good grade of moving picture shows and will occasionally book a traveling company, and there is no doubt that he will do a paying business.

Annual Meeting.

The annual meeting of the Brey Mutual Fire Insurance company of Pennington and Red Lake counties will be held in the city of St.Hilaire on Monday, the 5th day of January 1914,beginning at 11 o'clock A.M., to elect officers for the coming year and to transact other business that may come before said meeting.

THIEF RIVER GETS N. M. D. A. MEET

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE PLANS AN EXTENSIVE PUBLICITY CAMPAIGN.

At a meeting of the executive committee of the Northern Minnesota Development association held at Bemidji recently, Thief River Falls was awarded the summer convention and because of the elaborate program prepared, a three instead of the usual two days' gathering will be held, the dates being June 2, 3 and 4.

Members of the executive committee attending the meeting were C. A. Albright of Bemidji, president of the association; C. L. Conger, Mc Intosh; H. P. Jones, Bagley; J. P. Foote, Crookston; Charles T. Bell, Menahga, and W. R. McKenzie, secretary.

The committee decided to chose the Minneapolis display room at once and moved the main office of the association with Mr. Mackenzie in charge to 717 Palace Building, Minneapolis.

The secretary, under the direction of the president and executive committee was instructed to commence at once an elaborate campaign of publicity looking toward the speedy settlement of northern Minnesota.

Definite plans were laid for the collection of a fund of $20,000 for the purpose of holding the 1914 meeting of the association during the year.

A tentative program was arranged for the Thief River Falls meeting and one of unusual prominence will be among the speakers, but the committee refuses at this time to give their names. The meeting was awarded to Thief River Falls in competition with several other towns. Alvba Eastman of St. Cloud, Charles Mitchell of Duluth, F. B. Dunbary of Pine City, D. P. O'Neill of Thief River Falls and N. S. Davies of Crookston, were named a committee to meet with the Southern Minnesota Better Development league at Pa meeting 15, Mankato beginning Jan. 29.

FRIENDS HONOR CROMPE.

Tendered a Banquet by Business Associates Monday Night.

Monday night about fifty of the business and professional men of the city sat down to a banquet at Paul's hotel, the affair being given in honor of T. A. Crompe, who is soon to leave Red Lake Falls.

After the fine banquet that had been prepared by Mrs.Paul, had been disposed of, Mayor I. Lemieux, as toastmaster, called upon many of the guests for toasts. Mr. Crompe became a Red Lake Falls booster for more than twenty years, but he surely did not know until Monday night how sincere was the appreciation of his good works. Fifty men then told him frankly.

Mr. Crompe served on the board of education a dozen years, as a member of the city council an equal length of time and has been for many years a trustee of St.Joseph's church. In each of his public acts Mr. Crompe has aimed at the point to do in each case what seemed to him for the general good. That is why his public spirited efforts are appreciated by his Red Lake Falls associates.

Mr. Crompe and his family go to their new home in Crookston with the best wishes of hundreds of Red Lake Falls friends.

DESIRE ROBILLARD.

Oldest Resident of Terrebonne Town ship Passed Away Monday.

Desire Robillard, one of the pioneers of Terrebonne and the oldest resident of the township, passed away last Saturday. Mr. Robillard was eighty-three years of age and had been ill for a few weeks previous to his death.

The funeral was held at St. Anthony's church, Terrebonne, of which deceased was a member, Monday morning at 10:30 o'clock, Rev. Fr. LeMoch, pastor of the church, and Rev. Fr. Boyne, pastor of St. Joseph's church of this city officiating. The funeral was largely attended. Thirty or more from this city were in attendance. The pall bearers were four sons of Mr. Robillard, Ovilla, George, Aristide and Joseph. The deceased is survived by a home family of children, many more and relatives. Mrs. George Cyr of this city and Sister Pierre, a teacher in St. Joseph's school, are granddaughters.

BOY KILLED.

Result of Accidental Discharge of a Small Rifle.

Albert, the three year old son of Mr. and Mrs. Jos. Odit, well known pioneers of this county, living fifteen miles east of the city in the town of Cloverleaf was killed almost instantly last Sunday evening by the accidental discharge of a .22 rifle held by Paul Odit, playing with his little brother.

An older brother, about fifteen years old, had been rabbit hunting during the afternoon and on returning home had neglected to unload his .22 caliber rifle. About nine o'clock the same evening one of the little boys, younger brothers, a boy about nine years old was playing with the gun it was accidently discharged, sending the bullet into the boy brother's head through the center of the skin. The ball took a downward course, cutting the large jugular vein in the neck and lodging in the child's chest. Death resulted within twenty minutes before a physician could be summoned.—Thief River News-Press.

CAUSING WORRY ON CAPITOL HILL

ST. PAUL GRAFT EXPOSURES MAY EFFECT STATE POLITICS.

St. Paul—(Special)—With graft exposures, high officials being indicted and the grand jury still delving into the doings of the underworld and the police, St. Paul, the seat of state government, is enjoying nothing but an enviable position. What is bothering quite a few on Capitol Hill, though, is: Will the disclosures affect the state campaign? Who will suffer, the Democrats or the present state crowd? And in naming the latter I do not want to be taken as suggesting that Governor Eberhart or the lieutenants are in anyway involved in the disclosures. Where the present administration comes in is the general knowledge that Governor Eberhart and his backers have been friendly to the Keller crowd, which is in control in St. Paul and which just now is very much in the spotlight as a result of the graft disclosures. Last fall Governor Eberhart carried Ramsey county overwhelmingly and at the spring election which preceded it Mayor Keller put the best man the O'Connor crowd could produce out of business. Friendly relations between the two administrations was the result and what more natural that in the distribution of state plums the Keller forces should be recognized. Indeed in the big marble pile on Capitol Hill at the present time is Charles Keller, state fire marshal. He is a brother of Mayor Keller. Attached to the custodian's forces at the state capitol are fifty or twenty men who own their positions to the influence exerted by the St. Paul city administration. Then there are a number of game wardens and oil inspectors, so if some wood yes one see that even if in bed Mayor Keller and his crowd cut some ice in a state way. Mayor Keller, however, is through and so is the crowd that has brought his administration into disrepute. St. Paul voters will have no more of the bunch. At the same time it has less use for those who ostracized R. T. O'Connor as leader and it is here where the question prompts itself: Will the state and be hurt in the general job of local ditching which is to come? Might it not result in a new deal all around? Governor Eberhart's shirts are still clean. Those of the O'Connor crowd, however, are not. Still there is that known friendliness I spoke of, so you see most anything can happen. The general body of voters are a fickle lot.

Laying aside the political feature of it all, the state of affairs revealed is just now probably undergoing the greatest overhauling in its history. Things known for years are receiving official scrutiny and some one to be or got hurt in the process, and whether in the retirement of one administration St. Paul gets another probably just as badly smirched it will make the incoming crowd earn its pull. One has to live in St. Paul to know it and its people. Politics in most and drink to thousands of its voters and they play the game 365 days in the year. It is perhaps the most conservative town in the entire West. Wealth and influence rules it. Peace and comfort is the people's watchword. As a rule Democracy, headed by R. T. O'Connor, controls its civic affairs, but occasionally a growing minority rebels because of a high-tax rate or some other fancied grievance and then there is a change. It is one of these every six years chances that is making the trouble now. The Republicans do not know how to govern St. Paul and that is the whole trouble. St. Paul feels keenly with R. T. O'Connor on the throne and it looks very much as if he would be restored. This is not certain and not there are a lot of queer people in it.

Governor Eberhart's efforts in behalf of the dairy and beef herds of Minnesota are bearing fruit, according to communications received at the executive department, and his hopes of an increase of 25,000 head in the cattle herds of the state look as if they were due to be realized. The scheme as started by his executive was for the banks to take up the movement, rather together a car or so of certified stock and sell them to the farmers. To this end he called a meeting of state bankers. They responded in a way and now the secre-

G. O. P. COMMITTEE TO CHANGE RULES

NEW BASIS OF REPRESENTATION WILL AFFECT SOUTHERN DELEGATIONS.

SPECIAL CONVENTION LOSES

Subcommittee Given Task of Working Out Details of New Method —Borah Says Party Must Be Progressive.

Washington, Dec. 13.—After five hours of debate the Republican National committee determined that it was clothed with ample power to readjust the distribution of the party's national conventions—and had authority to make reforms in convention rules and procedure that have been demanded by many elements since the convention of 1912 and the Democratic victory last November.

Representation Basis Changed.

With little bitterness and no inquisitive evidence that differences which arose over methods could not be reconciled, the committee without a dissenting vote decided to make a change in the basis of representation in national conventions which will greatly affect southern states.

It also made full recognition to the principle of the primary in the election of delegates to such conventions, approved laws regarding such elections adopted by several states which provide that all delegates be selected at large, and accepted the principle that delegates properly accredited by state authorities should be placed on the temporary convention roll.

Only Difference on Surface.

The only difference of opinion that developed on the surface was over the question of machinery to be used to effect the reforms. Of the forty-nine committeemen who voted on the main roll taken, fourteen favored the calling of a special convention to bring about these changes, and thirty-five declared themselves opposed.

This resolution expresses the party's faith in primary election of delegates and to the right of a state to choose them at large, but details of the method of reducing southern representation were left to a special subcommittee.

With the adoption of the report of this subcommittee the national committee will adjourn probably until 1916.

Borah Expresses Regrets.

In closing the discussion for opponents of the special convention plan Senator Borah expressed regret to find himself not in harmony with such of his intimate friends as former-Governor Hadley, Senators Cummins of Iowa and Jones of Washington and others whom he held in high regard.

"If the Republican party adopts a reactionary platform in 1916 it will become nothing but the voice of the ordinary," declared Borah. "I believe it is progressive and I want to gather up that progressive sentiment and crystallize it in 1916. If we call a convention in 1916 what position will we be in? There are states with primary laws not adapted for a national convention except for the selection of a national ticket. Such a convention would inevitably result in the selection of hand-picked delegates in two thirds of the states and the only platform promulgated would be a tame expression of the rank and file of the people and would not be one upon which the party would be able to go to the country within the next congressional election."

The senator further asserted that a convention in 1916 would merely result in fulmination in the air and that the progressive element in the party would not join in it.

SAY SCHMIDT IS DEMENTED

Father, Sister and Boyhood Chum Testify Prisoner Has Been Crazy for Years.

New York, Dec. 13.—The father, the sister and boyhood chum of Jesse Schmidt swore on the witness stand that Schmidt has been crazy for years. They were first witnesses for the defense in his trial for the murder of Anna Aumuller.

Before they testified Schmidt fawned to his feet and dramatically shouted: "It's a lie!" as his lawyer outlined his case to the jury. The lawyer said he expected to prove that Schmidt was insane, had been for years, and always would be.

"I protest against that," cried Schmidt, and kept on protesting until court officers quieted him.

The first teacher of Schmidt, Tenney Hill, who went to school with him there in Germany, testified that he believed the prisoner to be of unsound mind and that he had been so for twelve years.

Fatal Fire Probably Incendiary.

Chatsworth, Ont., Dec. 13.—Five residences and a score were injured when fire, believed to be of incendiary origin, damaged the Salvation Army home for men here. Many of the inmates were overcome by smoke, while others suffered burns in making their way out of the burning building. Several of the injured are in a serious condition. The dead are: Arthur, Sandell of Bangor, Me., proprietor and clerk of the home; F. Shodell, believed to work in this city, and three unidentified men.

Delivered Liquor to Indians.

Washington, Dec. 13.—George W. Rose of Salina, Neb., a temperance man who unwittingly delivered packages containing liquor to persons on the Pine Ridge Indian reservation, South Dakota, was relieved by President Wilson from the 60-day jail sentence imposed upon him, although he will have to pay $100 fine and costs, totaling about $300. While a fair was in progress in the reservation Rose was asked to bring some packages in his delivery automobile from Marvin.

Miss Mary E. Dell of Portland, Ore., who is presiding over the government inquiry into the affairs of the American Telephone and Telegraph company, commonly called the Bell telephone system, now being conducted in Philadelphia. The suit, has been brought by the department of justice against the company by the Pacific coast, charging violation of the Sherman anti-trust law. Judge Robert S. Bean of the United States district court at Portland appointed Miss Dell special examiner to take testimony preliminary to the trial of the case.

DOCTORS PLAN TO STRIKE

WISCONSIN EUGENICS LAW CAUSING PHYSICIANS TROUBLE.

Medical Men Say They Cannot Afford to Make Legal Tests for Three Dollars Fee.

Milwaukee, Dec. 13.—The Milwaukee Medical society has refused to comply with the state eugenic marriage law requiring physical examination for marriage must prove their physical fitness by the production of a physician's certificate.

The doctors say they cannot afford to give the examinations for the statutory price. A committee has been named to put the problem before the state board of health.

If doctors refuse to issue these certificates there can be no marriages solemnized in Wisconsin after Jan. 1, except securing certificates from the regular county physicians, who will be able to make the required tests through the state board of health. With the state board making all tests for the state, however, there will be a great delay attendant upon all applications for marriage licenses.

The result of the threatened strike is expected in the large number of licenses being secured this month, to anticipate the operation of the law of the new law. The attorney general ruled that the doctors could not be forced to issue certificates for $3, and the doctors say the cost of performing the tests would be nearer $10.

Under the law, elopements in Wisconsin will be impossible, as a self takes at the best a month to make and report on the required tests.

BE INACTIVE; AVOID CANCER

Wisconsin Pathologist Says Life's Lived in the Tropics Is Best.

Madison, Wis., Dec. 13.—If you want to be free from cancer lead the life of physical inactivity of the native Americans in the tropics, says Dr. C. H. Bunting, professor of pathology of the University of Wisconsin.

"Occupational cancer is found among those doing indoor work," he said, "of-door work. It is a disease of the old, rather than the young. It is common to people of French, Scotch and German races than, of Americans. It develops more readily among wooded streams in quiet rural districts than in the open plains. And is a disease of the small town and village rather than of the city," he added.

I. W. W. Speakers Acquitted.

Kansas City, Dec. 13.—Thirteen speakers and singers of the Industrial Workers of the World were acquitted after an attempt was made to hold a street demonstration. All of the men arrested were red badges on which was printed: "Free Speech." The police asserted that when the men were arrested they had no badges and was found on the persons of the others.

Egg Prices Forced Down.

Kansas City, Dec. 13.—Eggs on Saturday, December 6, ten days ago, at a meeting of local organizations, of which twenty-five have been affiliated, eggs were selling at 40 cents at the stores, but on Saturday, December 13, they retailed at 30, 30, 34 cents.

CARDINAL RAMPOLLA IS DEAD

END COMES VERY SUDDENLY IN ETERNAL CITY.

Mentioned as Possible Successor to Pius X—Ex-Secretary of State and Candidate for Papacy.

Rome, Dec. 17.—Cardinal Rampolla, former papal secretary of state, is dead.

Cardinal Rampolla was not known to be ill, but had several times suffered from serious attacks of influenza similar to the ailment which has afflicted the pope. It was Cardinal Rampolla who celebrated the Te Deum at Rome on May 11 in thanksgiving for the recovery of the pope.

Cardinal Rampolla, Marquis Del Tindaro, was appointed secretary of state by Pope Leo XIII and at the conclave for the election of a successor to Pope

Cardinal Rampolla.

Leo, was the predominant figure until Austria exercised an old prerogative, the right to exercise a veto against the election of a given candidate for the papacy. Cardinal Rampolla led on the first and second votes.

Of late, Cardinal Rampolla has been mentioned as a possible successor to Pope Pius X. He was born at Pollari, Sicily, in 1843, and was proclaimed cardinal in 1887. He was archpriest of St. Peter's and secretary of the congregation of the Universal Inquisition.

Japanese Launch Battle Cruiser.

Kobe, Japan, Dec. 16.—The battle cruiser Haruna, a sister ship of the Kongo, which was built in England for the Japanese navy, was launched here. Japan will build three superdreadnoughts in 1914 to home fleet yards. Though classified as a battle cruiser the Haruna, in size and power, will be almost the equal of the United States battleship Texas. In speed and radius of action she should be superior to the Texas. The Haruna is to be 704 feet long, 92 feet in breadth and have a draught of 27 feet five

FINAL GOVERNMENT REPORT ON CROPS

CORN SMALLEST SINCE 1903—WHEAT LARGEST YIELD EVER RECORDED.

NCREASE OF PRCES, THOUGH

This Compensates For Decreased Yields—Department of Agriculture Bulletin Covers Fourteen Leading Crops.

Washington, Dec. 17.—Final estimates of the production and value of forty-one of the important crops which form a part of the enormous grand total, approximating opportunely $40,000,000,000, of wealth produced on farms through land and farmers' livestock during 1913, just announced by the crop reporting board of the agricultural department of agriculture. The figures are the official government estimates of the total production and value, based on prices paid to farmers on Dec. 1. These fourteen crops are only a portion of the production of the field which approximates $8,000,000,000 in value each year. The total value of the animal products of the farm is estimated at about $3,000,000,000 annually.

The Main Crops.

The government's estimates are: Corn, 2,446,988,000 bushels; winter wheat, 333,951,000 bushels; spring wheat, 229,819,000 bushels; all wheat, 563,770,000 bushels.

Below-the-Average.

The production per acre in the United States in 1913 was materially below the average," the secretary of agriculture, David F. Houston, announces, "the yield per acre of all crops combined being smaller than in any year of the past decade, with the exception of 1911, which shortage was caused by a severe drouth, accompanied by excessive heat during the summer months, in an important portion of the agricultural district of the United States—the Mississippi valley region, Oklahoma, Missouri and adjacent states.

"Inasmuch as crop production of 1913 was relatively much greater in proportion than cereal has been carried into the next crop year, the country should anticipate somewhat the effects of the shortage of this year's crops.

Corn Crop Smallest Since 1903.

"The corn crop, the most valuable farm product of this country, is smaller than any crop since 1912. Wheat production is the largest ever recorded in this country."

To Inspect M. & St. L.

New York, Dec. 17.—Newman Erb, president of the Missouri, Kansas & Texas railroad company, and a party of railroad men and bankers will go to Minneapolis for an inspection report of the road. Mr. Erb is mentioned as a possible successor to Pope, Plus X. He was born at Pollari, Sicily, in 1843, and was proclaimed cardinal in 1887. He was archpriest of St. Peter's and secretary of the congregation of the Universal Inquisition.

Evidence Against Schmidt.

New York, Dec. 17.—Jesse Schmidt sought to secure $10,000 insurance on the life of Miss Anna Aumuller, whom he slew, back in 1911, Carl Aptil, according to the testimony of Harold M. Hayes, an insurance examiner, testified in Schmidt's trial for murder. The state contends that Schmidt was planning that to murder the young woman. Aptil died on the night of Aug. 31, 1911, blank upon which Schmidt wrote out the application for insurance was offered in evidence.

Mrs. Lucy T. Rudolph, boy in Marinette, but formerly of Woodruff, Wis., was granted a decree from Carl Rudolph, Mrs. alleged, among other things, that her husband once slapped her father in her presence.

Rudolph, who contested the divorce action, admitted in his answer to the complaint that he took a slap at his father-in-law, but he did not think it jarred the elderly gentleman as much as his wife's divorce complaint made it appear.

HOUSE DEMOCRATS CONFER TO GUARD AGAINST DEFICIT.

Purpose to Observe Economy Plank of Baltimore Platform—Meet With Speaker Clark.

Washington, Dec. 16.—Democratic chairmen of appropriation committees of the house ensure Speaker Clark and Leader Underwood that they will use their influence with their committee members to hold all appropriations in compliance with the Baltimore convention platform instruction for economy, and thereby run danger of a treasury deficit following enactment of the new tariff law.

For the first time the speaker of the house assumed responsibility and summoned for a general economy conference preceding formation of the government money supply bills. It came about because of danger to the treasury balances growing out of the increased demands for money and criticism of the Democratic administration representatives and cabinet members who have been asked for money to put into effect new policies emphasizing enlargement of departmental activities.

Chairman Fitzgerald of the general appropriations committee submitted a report, under which the total estimate of revenues for the fiscal year 1915, for which the committee must appropriate, is placed at $1,035,000,000. The total estimate of regular and permanent annual appropriations for this year is $1,013,861,877.

The excess of estimated appropriations, exclusive of deficiences and miscellaneous expenses, over the estimated revenues for the year, is $73,-861,877. Were the deficiency items it would have to be made up through a bond issue or by carried over unused

WHEN SANTA CLAUS BOARDS MAN-O'-WAR

ABSURD as it may sound to every one, the blockades still believe in Santa Claus. That rotund, rosy-cheeked little old man pays a yearly attention to the thousands of boys on board the warships as he does to the thousands of, perhaps younger in years, boys and girls ashore. Instead of coming in a sleigh with reindeer and merry bells, he comes to a precarious-looking boat, fully armed and conveyed, with the boom of musketry and the loud blowing of horns. The blowing of horns is a universal custom with the boys of all countries and colors and with the blockaders too.

On Christmas day Santy is the highest ranking officer of the fleet, and all flags are hauled to his fly from bowsprit to mainmast. Will the flag lieutenant, his aide and the rest of the staff, he cruiser's chest among the ships distributing the gifts with which his argosy is laden. His method of doing this is fraught with as much red tape as was ever the greetings of the old admiral of the Dutch fleet in the time of Queen Bess. All the paraphernalia symbolical of austere rank and bounty that can be gotten together are used as adornments and no end of work is expended on the rig of the boat to be used, which is sometimes the wherry and sometimes the gunt.

In order to hold to the traditional custom used in the time of Paul Jones and down through the years, the boat is rigged like a brig, that is, with two masts and yard arms crossing with fife and staysail and spanker out astern. On the fore and after quarters they arrange large wooden tubes, in which are inserted small arms. These "spiggoty guns" compose the saluting battery and heavy main battery also, and are manned and fired by "Flay the Cat of Der Proit," who is a ponderous man in his official garb and daring in the way he approaches the ship, whose crew throng the sides and answer the salute with a revolver shot from the poop.

The saluting takes place before "Der Proit" is within hailing distance, and all hands have a laugh at the joke it sounds, strangely enough to the mind of the admiral himself, who distributes them accordingly, cutting many ridiculous capers.

They are gotten up and made by the friends of those to whom they are sent, with an idea to awards characterizing the ambition, the wishes or the pleading jokes that mark the receiver. If the captain is a four striper he will probably get an admiral's star, unless he has some other wish for which he is more properly known. When he is presented with this he can only shake his head in derision at Santy, and take his place, second only, to supreme on Christmas day.

But the greatest gift that Santy can bestow falls to the lot of the boy through some mischance or slip, have come in lieu for punishment. In fact, he never is retired proudly "Der Proit" is a hard one to fill to the satisfaction of every one who eats at the wardroom table. There is always some old tar or other who imagines himself to be slighted by the generosity of his friend, and the appreciation boys take from him the habit of considering that very little reason on their side. Diarrea often results and have to be forbidden to the "mast," where the first lieutenant (first luff) sentences them in favor of the commissary, so that the sailor arranges a private settlement with the commissary later, on which the first luff has nothing to say about it.

The burden of the repast falls naturally upon the cooks and mess attendants. It is far from an enjoyable affair with these, although they are on pair of binoculars in the form of two quart wine bottles lashed together, in his own estimation a present of getting, his fearless joy contributing, to the sailors about him. Presently he reports to Santy, who has deposited the basket of presents on the quarter deck, "Sir, I see we are only in the Cannibal latee."

Santy begins then to pick up presents and read the names aloud, giving them to the crew of "Der Proit" and the admiral's wife (and so on to the admiral himself, who distributes them accordingly, cutting many ridiculous capers.

This occurred in summer and on a hill table in winter. Three of the seeds planted in a large pot last spring, have grown into trees of three little tapering trees, one taller than the other two, and

PRIMA DONNA IN LION'S CAGE FOR MOVIES

Miss Fanny Denton, the world-famous prima donna, recently played the part of "Carmen" in a picture drama with "Alexander," one of the Hagenbeck lions, for whose cage she appeared during the performance. The picture, "Carmen and the Lion-Tamer," is a photo drama, for the moving-pictures and was staged in Berlin, Germany. Miss Denton says the lion-tamer gave her an ungrateful kitten.

PLANTS OF SIBERIA

Explorer Hunts New Seeds in Siberian Weeds.

Finds Forages That May Be Grown in Northwest—Discovery of Hairy Red Clover and New Mongolian Wheat.

Washington, D. C.—Russian explorers have been scouring the steppes of Siberia and Mongolia in search of new forage plants that may be grown in the northwestern states, and the results of their labors are now beginning to be known. Among the most important of the new plants found is a hairy red clover, which gives promise of being a valuable addition to the forage plants of the northwestern states. Another new plant is a species of sweet clover, which is said to be unusually rich in protein, and which is also valuable for its honey-producing qualities. Still another new plant is a species of wheat which is said to be unusually hardy and productive.

The seed of the hairy, purple-flowered Siberian alfalfa, which also forms a valuable addition to the forage plants of the northwestern states, was brought here by Professor Hansen, of the Iowa State College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts, who returned from a fourth trip in the wilds of Siberia, bringing with him the seed of this plant. It is hardy, alfalfa, and, so far as known, entirely free from the fungous diseases which sometimes attack it. The seed is of the hairy, purple-flowered Siberian alfalfa, which also forms a valuable addition to the forage plants of the northwestern states, and also with this comes a new wheat said also to be unusually hardy and productive. One bright spot in the cornfield is the fact that the corn crop is the largest ever grown in the state, and the quality is unusually good. The acreage of corn is also large, and the yield per acre will be above the average.

The 65 assembly districts carried by John Purroy Mitchel it is shown that 30 the percentage of voters are native whites of native parentage, in three districts the leading element are of Austrian parentage, in eight districts of German parentage and in two districts of Italian parentage.

MINISTER IS FOUND DAZED

Half Naked, He Said He Was Walking to Atlantic City to Swim.

New Brunswick, N. J.—Rev. A. Archer Anderson, a Methodist Episcopal minister of Asbury Park, N. J., was found in a dazed condition here wandering on a road on the outskirts of the town.

He was almost naked, and carplained his name and address by saying he was walking to Atlantic City to swim in the ocean. He was sent to President Wilson in Washington.

He said he intended to walk all the way to Washington, because of his treatment received from a conductor and a brakeman on a railroad train earlier in the day.

He left the train near this place, attracting attention as he did so by singing and shouting hymns.

ROYALTY AT GRAND GUIGNOL

Famous Paris Theater Without Its Famous Star.

Paris.—Painful duty was to be paid Prince and Princess Alexis of Cantacuzene Russian Speransky and Count and Countess Ignatieff when they presently meet on the other side of the Styx. Their friends should be among the other visitors. One night they were seen at the Grand Guignol, the play theater where half a dozen years party for the most part was limited to maize, milk, fat called mutton, broom corn and dourra wheat bread.

"Alfalfa seed was by no means all that Professor Hansen obtained, however. A total of seventeen varieties of alfalfa, in that of a hairy red clover from a region where the rainfall is about eight inches and where it is little time for protection, and the climate frequently freezes. To this seed Professor Hansen brought back 142 pounds. With this experiments will be made with a view to adding a new clover to the crops of South Dakota.

"A new species of sweet clover was another discovery of importance. This is a large yellow and red stemmed, seven-foot weed not unlike the valuable white clover. With the increasing interest there is just now in sweet clovers as forage for the conservation of this information will be watched with great interest. A new wheat has also been added to the list as a result of this trip of Professor Hansen's. It is a Mongolian wheat and has a very large kernel, and along with this comes another unexpected relic, which gives generous yields with only an eight-inch rainfall. This is the corner stone of the land questions of Siberia and is used as a food for both cattle and people.

"Professor Hansen's trip to Siberia was the second one he has made for the purpose of securing plants which may be grown in the northwestern states. He was sent out by the department of agriculture at Washington, D. C. Professor Hansen discovered the yellow alfalfa, which was also brought here, on his first trip. He says that the yellow alfalfa is of great importance and that, used largely, they would increase the feeding value of South Dakota lands.

"The trip was a very hard one, he says. The people of the state were very kind to him. Consequently the last legislature passed two measures, one providing $15,000 for further exploration in Siberia and Mongolia, and the other appointing a commission to study the question of the introduction of new forage plants. The commissioners of South Dakota, and the other members of the commission are Professor Hansen to discuss to gather such a crop of seed as he could on the expedition. Professor Hansen has profitably explored with success. In both of these trips Professor Hansen has endeared as the man to conduct an exploration.

Having put his discoveries in the hand of order to a virulent scientific organization, Professor Hansen will start again for Siberia. He hopes to obtain many other things that he has been unable to secure on his previous trips, and he will be gone for about two years. He is a graduate of his state.

Professor Hansen's trip to Siberia was made from Vladivostok to Harbin, where he went first by the Russian railroad and then by the Chinese railroad to Kalgan, and from there he continued to Kobdo, in the province of Uliastai, and on to Urga, the capital of Outer Mongolia. From there he went first by the Russian railroad

ABSURD as it may sound to every one, the blockaders still believe in Santa Claus. That round, rosy-cheeked little old man pays as much attention to the thousands of boys on board the warships as he does to the thousands of perhaps younger in years, boys and girls ashore. Instead of coming in a sleigh with reindeer and merry bells, he comes in a precarious-looking boat, fully armed and conveyed, with the boom of musketry and the loud blowing of horns. The blowing of horns is a universal custom with the boys of all countries and colors and with the blockaders too.

On Christmas day Santy in the highest ranking officer of the fleet, and all flags are hoisted on his fair tree lashted to the mainhead. With his flag lieutenant, his aide and the rest of the staff, he makes about among the ships distributing the gifts with which his argosy is laden. His method of doing this is fraught with as much red tape as was ever the greetings of the old admiral of the Dutch fleet in the time of Queen Bess. All the paraphernalia symbolical of austere rank and bounty that can be gotten together are used as adornments and no end of work is expended on the rig of the boat to be used, which is sometimes the wherry and sometimes the punt.

In order to hold to the traditional custom used in the time of Paul Jones and down through the years, the boat is rigged like a brig, that is, with two masts and yard arms crossing, with jib and stay-sail and spanker out aloft. On the fore and after quarters they arrange large wooden tubes in which are inserted small arms. These "spigotty guns" comprise the saluting battery and heavy main battery guns and are manned and fired by the boatswain of "De Freyt," who as a ponderous man in his official garb and during in the way he approaches the ships, whose crews throng the sides and answer the salute with a revolver shot from the poop.

CHRISTMAS DINNER AT THE "DE FREYT"

The saluting takes place before "Der Freyt" is within hailing distance, and all hands have a laugh at the tiny sounds, strangely contrasted in their minds with the salute of the big guns which they are accustomed to hear. Next the boatswain gets up in the bows and reciting one hand almost on top of the foremast and lifting a megaphone as long as himself to his lips, calls out at the top of his voice, "Ship, ahoy!" The quartermaster answers from the bridge, "Hello, hello! Der Freyt!" "Aye, aye," the bowman returns. "Come alongside," calls the quartermaster. Then the admiral of "Der Freyt" rises in the stern, some ten feet aft of the boatswain in the bow, his head on a level with the topmast, and hawls out through his megaphone, "All hands form! sail!" With that the crew, consisting of one man, who also acts in the capacity of bugler, gets under ships and climbs the mainmast, which sways to and fro as if about to capsize the entire craft, and pulls down all the sails. "The vessel is standing to," he then calls out to the boatswain, who reports to the admiral over the cross trees, who in turn reports to Santa Claus, sitting in the stern sheets at the tiller. All these orders are given and carried out in the most solemn manner, to the merriment of the ship's crew looking on from the rail above.

The crew of "Der Freyt" then gets out oars and pulls alongside while on deck the real Santa's mate pipes eight side boys to stand at the head of the gangway and salute the admiral as Santa Claus when they come aboard. The president of the United States only rates six side boys when he comes aboard, while Santy has his eight, besides his are petty officers while the president's are only good-looking apprentice boys. As the argosy draws alongside the boatswain pipes the bosn, bow tune and three short blasts characteristic of the coming aboard of great men.

No love a person than the captain of the ship meets the admiral of "Der Freyt," his wife, Santy, laden with a huge basket full of presents, the boatswain and the crew, while the bugler sounds three portentious ruffles and the ship's company, assembled aft, stands at attention. Indeed the officers are all present, for they believe in Santy as well as do the crew. When the admiral's wife, some fair faced sailor with a handsome lad and a tawdry skirt, swings aboard holding her train high and exposing a generous view of red stocking to the eyes of the sailors, a great laugh is evoked and a shout goes up, "higher, higher," or "Oh, you Kiddo!"

The boatswain in command of the crew shouts to his one man for, "Attention!" and then puts him through a series of gymnastics of a peculiar and intensely funny character. The admiral, as if not thoroughly taking in the handsome, lifts a huge pair of binoculars in the form of two short wire tubes latched together, to his eyes and makes a pretense of getting his bearings by scrutinizing the sailors about him. Presently he reports to Santy, who has deposited his basket of presents on the quarter deck, "Sir, I see we are now in the Cannibal Isles."

Santy begins then to pick up presents and read the names aloud, giving them to the crew of "Der Freyt" and the admiral's wife, and even to the admiral himself, who distributes them accordingly, cutting many ridiculous capers.

The presents are of a type that bring laughter. They are gotten up and made by the friends of those to whom they are sent, with an idea towards characterizing the ambition, the whim or the standing jokes that mark the receiver. If the captain is a four striper he will probably get an admiral's star, unless he has some other rating by which he is more properly known. When he is presented with this he can only blush in the presence of everybody, and take his dose, as Santy is supreme on Christmas day.

But the greatest gift that Santy can bestow falls to the lot of those who, through some misfortune or slip, have come in line for punishment. It is customary for Santy to walk boldly up to the captain and ask him to "whitewash" the books. In the face of everybody and on Christmas day the captain can not very well refuse this request, although some captains have been seen to wince and cough before granting the innocent-looking figures who have not fallen before the multiplicity of temptations that daily assail the man-o'-wareman.

The exact which forms a background for all this merriment is the regular "big feed," as the sailors call it. For the last week this has crept into their conversation. Pig, turkey and plum duff are the three great delicacies to the sailors, and they have more respect for them than for all three graces.

"What kind of a feed is the commissary steward and us" one sailor asks of another. During this time of anticipation excitement runs high and the commissary is a very much respected person. In fact, he is usually a retired person, for his billet is a hard one to fill to the satisfaction of every one who eats at the general mess. There is always some old tar or other who imagines himself to be slighted by the quality of his food, and the appreciative boys take him from the habit of combining the salty element with the sweet. Quarrels often result and have to be referred to the "mate," where the first lieutenant (first luff) settles the matter in favor of the commissary, so that the sailor arranges a private settlement with the commissary later on when the first luff has nothing to say about it.

The burden of the repast falls naturally upon the cooks and mess attendants. It is far from an enjoyable affair with them, although they are an

NOT OF THE SAME STRAIN

Famous Dogs of St. Bernard's Pass Are Not the Equals of Those of Former Days.

Half a century ago, or even in more recent days, such rescues by St. Bernard dogs as the one reported recently from St. Bernard's pass were matters of comparatively frequent occurrence and many were the romantic tales told of the almost human intelligence displayed by the St. Bernards of the famous hospice, which were specially bred by the monks to fulfill their errands of mercy.

The breed is in a very different position from that which it occupied many years ago, for practically the entire stock of St. Bernards belonging to the hospice was wiped out by a terrific storm one winter's night. This necessitated the monks rebuilding their strain from blood obtained from the plains below and other sources, a course which was taken much against their will, for they have prided themselves for generations upon the purity of the hospice strain.

Plant Grapefruit Seed.

A single grapefruit seed, planted in rich soil and watered diligently, will develop into a graceful little tree, with glossy, dark green leaves—just the thing to stand on the porch step in summer and on a hall table in winter. Three of the seeds, planted in a large pot had sprig, have grown into three of these little tapering trees, each much taller than the other two, and affable lot. The preparation of the potatoes is the work of a dozen men, since they must be extraordinarily nice.

"The chinners" arrange themselves astride a bench in ranks of a tub where one pan sits and tosses potatoes continually. The tub is kept full by another man who dumps in from a sack carried down from the upper deck. So a revolution inside the skins of peeled potatoes going constantly into another tub, which is dragged into the galley and dumped into a great iron through which water is percolating. These are risen of around by another mess attendant and dumped into the other urns where steam is turned on, while another tub of peeled ones are being brought from the skinners.

When they are done the ship's cook himself, who pases to and fro in the galley all the while, mounts upon the nearest urn with his aid and ladles a great six-foot basket dredge there were at tables ready to receive the boiled delicacies. The mess tables are so numbered as that each sailor knows just where to go when he gets down through the hatchway, and he doesn't waste any time getting there on the occasion. It is indeed a singular and lively scene on the gundeck at this period. Every man's plate is heaped to the brim before him and all apply themselves with a will, and disregard for mere stomachs that would make a dyspeptic wince and turn his head. Scores of tables dredge boxes between them hold volumes of suitors, who seem only restrained from eating each other alive by the flimsy, vibrating hoards which support the food

When these nervous appetites have been stoked and even those who have the dilseling powers of an anaconda are put at rest, or in pain, as the case may be, after the feast, the crew's band will begin to grow reminiscent and tell of the Christmases they have spent in the past. Of course there are as turkeys nor anything else fit for the "big feed."

Says old Pete, the sailmaker's mate: "I mint the time down in Darien, when the steward had nothin' to fire storeroom but a ton of cranberry bitcuits full of bugs, so when y' hested 'em with the bendin 'ye hatin they went mainly nifty in every direction—some in the galley, some in the cup, up yer sleeves and around the mess pans. But, mates, that was a Christmas for you! We couldn't eat the buffalo meat, it was that much like bolt rope, so we drunk of coffee and scrapped ourselves in big mass down the table. By tryin' all the bugs out we got some speedy ones. And they was speedy. I had one that I sent down past that table—trot, mind y'—like it was Maude S herself. The devil of it was the Skipper he wouldn't keep in the coiires between the plates. Bird break for a hole near the flask, I tell you, money on 'er, though, and after loosin' 20 bones per bar duckin' out of it when she was two whole plate lengths ahead, when I clapped my hand to head bor off the next time and win anyhow, so I put up 20 bones—I had good cold plunks in my skinny little runt of a hag, and strike me blind! you ought a seen that race! Oo! That cleared little bug slid down that mean table like it was on ball bearings. I headed 'er off at the hole with a piece of text and she ran clean again the barn boxed of the table an' butted 'er brains out. Licked over on her back and died. Best bug race! Whew! I raked in the coin from the capitalo of the hold Christmas! Well, strike me blue! That was some Christmas even if we didn't have any eats."

PLANTS OF SIBERIA

Explorer Hunts New Seeds in Siberian Weeds.

Finds Forages That May Be Grown to Advantage—Discovery of Hardy Red Clover and New Mongolian Wheat.

Brookings, S. D.—Another advance toward the conquest of its prairie uplands has been made by South Dakota.

Prof. N. E. Hansen of the State College of Agriculture and Mechanics Arts has just returned from a fourth trip to the wilds of Siberia, bringing with him one and five-eighths tons of hardy alfalfa seed, an amount in excess of his own and his friends' fondest hopes when he set out on his expedition last May.

The seed is of the hardy, upright, yellow flowered Siberian alfalfa. Michigan falcata, which has already proved its worth in the western parts of South Dakota, and even far up into Canada, and it was to get additional supplies of such seed that his state sent him abroad.

On previous trips to Siberia for the department of agriculture at Washington, D. C., Professor Hansen discovered the yellow flowered alfalfas. And brought home quantities of the seed to be tested in this country. The seed was distributed and tried under varying conditions. In the high and dry regions of South Dakota, after long and painstaking trials to develop seeds and plants, it was seen that these alfalfas were a discovery of first importance and that, used largely, they would add immensely to the value of the state's forage.

The problem was to obtain more of this. The people of the state were eager to solve this. Consequently the last legislature passed two measures, one providing $15,000 for further experimenting with seeds and plants under a nursery system, and the other providing $10,000 to send Professor Hansen to Siberia to gather such a crop of seed as he could on the open steppes in regions he had previously explored with success. In both of these bills Professor Hansen was named as the man to conduct the work.

Having put his nurseries in the best of order by a vigorous spring campaign, Professor Hansen set out May 19 for Siberia. He hoped to make possible a ton of the kind of seed he was after. He arrived at Seregeja Saturday to announce that he had obtained more than a ton and a half, besides many other things that he believed would be of great value to the people of his state.

On his way east Professor Hansen stopped at Petrograd long enough to obtained his passports. Then he hastened to Moscow, where he secured the permits necessary to cross the frontier. By the Trans-Siberian railroad he took the journey to Omsk and thence southward to lower Siberia, into a region of the steppes. Here, where gold, where the rainfall averages from eight to nine inches. Moving out by wagon, camping on the steppes, he organized native alfalfa gathering parties and set to work.

The work was by no means easy. The heat of the steppe regions were wild and unruly, wild animals at times gave a good deal of trouble and the treatment received from officials was without difficulties. The diet of the party for the most part was limited to barley meal, fat tailed mutton, brown corn and coarse hard bread.

Alfalfa seed was by no means all that Professor Hansen obtained, however. A find of exceptional value, in his estimation, is that of a hardy red clover, from a region where the rainfall is about eight inches and where there is little snow for protection, and the mercury frequently freezes. Of this seed Professor Hansen brought back 142 pounds. With this experiments will be made with a view to adding a new clover to the crops of South Dakota.

A new species of sweet clover was another discovery of importance. This is large seeded and red stemmed, grows tall and erect and is more palatable than other sweet clovers. With the increasing interest there is just now in sweet clovers as a forage the development of this importance will be watched with great interest.

A new wheat has also been added to the list as a result of this trip of Professor Hansen's. It is a Mongolian wheat and has a very large kernel. And along with this comes a large, white seeded millet, which gave generous yields with only an eight-inch rainfall. This "is the "corner stone" of dry land agriculture in Siberia," Professor Hansen said as food for both men and beasts.

Among Professor Hansen's horticultural discoveries on this trip is one of special note. It is a new hardy cherry. With this to work upon by grossing, and selection a hardy, cherry tree may be developed in many within a reasonable time be developed.

He had left the train near this place, attracting attention as he did so by singing and shouting hymns.

'HOW I TANGOED WITH TEDDY'

Chicago Girl Tells of Good Time on Steamer That Bore Roosevelt to South America.

Chicago.—Here are a few facts about Colonel Roosevelt which the public might never have known had not a pretty Chicago girl divulged them.

The colonel is an expert dancer, and a ready pupil in the mysteries of the tango.

He is really a handsome man, if you view him from the proper angle.

He is supreme in the gentle art of small talk.

He is "just simply the greatest man that ever lived."

Miss Mabel Shaw is authority for these statements concerning the colonel's attributes. Miss Shaw arrived at Rio Janeiro after a trip on the steamer Van Dyke, which carried Roosevelt and his party on their South American excursion. In a letter to her mother, Mrs. Helen Shaw of 1132 Granville avenue, North Edgewater, Miss Shaw waxed enthusiastic over the virtues and graces of the former president.

"I'm just wild to meet him, mother," he wrote before the Van Dyke sailed. "We're so lucky to be on the same boat with him. Do you think he will notice me?"

And then later:

"Well, mother, dear, it's happened, and he's just wonderful. The other night we were all dancing in the salon and Colonel Roosevelt, just like a high school boy, came up and bowed to me, and asked if he mightn't have the next dance. Of course, I was flushed to death, but I tried my best not to let him see it.

"Mr. Roosevelt is a dandy dancer. He told me lots of things about his adventures while we were sitting over the floor, and really, mother, it was too marvelous for words. He has asked me to tell him about myself, and I told him of my ambitions to become an opera singer, and he was so kind. Said he was sure there was no one who deserved success more than I did, and encouraged me so much. He's a perfect dear.

"Later in the evening I sang before the whole ship's company at Colonel Roosevelt's request, and the men got together and gave me a lovely bouquet of flowers."

ROYALTY AT GRAND GUIGNOL

Prince and Princess Arthur Attend Famous Paris Theater Without Being Recognized.

Paris—During their stay in Paris Prince and Princess Arthur of Connaught lived very quietly at the Ritz, spending most of the time seeing their friends and walking around the Bois like any other visitor. One night they were each at the Grand Guignol, that tiny theater where half a dozen rows of stalls and three rows of gallery can have their fill of horrible or the exquisitely amusing for a few francs, and have their blasé senses of surprise restored at each interval by ragtime tunes played on a piano.

That before the entertainment began the royal party came into the stalls, and there was nothing but the presence of two heavily armed policemen (who themselves in the gallery) to celebrate the occasion. Certainly no one knew who they were.

Possibly they did not like the entertainment much. On going out the prince's car was heard to say to the concierge: "Did you guess her head was in the bag?" Apparently he didn't. But in an evening which provided a great architect case, several murders and a conviction, decapitation was only a trifle, after all.

If the Mexican belligerents, both rebels or the several outfits, could be given color fast class instructions in marksmanship, the waiting game might not be so long drawn out.

The world service has its limitations, of course. There are people who, never having been out of the nation, get at least a hundred in department until he has failures in goal from high fair excessive ability.

CO-AUTORS' REMARKS.

Hotch Chief. The party out of power has always been an ardent supporter of civil service reform.

Princeton Union: Frank Day, the chief of Governor Johnson's kitchen cabinet, hopes Henry Ustus will be the next state auditor. Your hopes will be realized, Frank.

Red Wing Eagle: At least one-half of the existing state departments ought to be abolished and their functions distributed where they belong—with local authorities. This home-rule result is not only greater economy, but is far better service. But of course it would result in fewer jobs for politicians to do business with, and as a consequence many of them who are now flourishing would go "broke," for lack of capital. It would not be difficult to make a few.

Princeton Union: There may be defects in Senator Cashman's distance tariff law but it should have a fair trial. The law aims to correct abuses that have existed for years and injuriously affected the interests of many of the towns and cities of the state. If there are flaws in the law they they can be corrected. The spirit and intent of the law is just, and as far as practicable, its provisions should be impartially enforced.

tocracy has the satisfaction of receiving reports showing the movement far in advance of his fondest expectations. J. R. Keefe of Redwood county will in all probability get into the race for representative at large from that county. Brown county is included in the district. Keefe, who is a Democrat, was a former member of the legislature, serving during the sessions of 1905 and 1911, but he was compelled to give way to a Republican. If he makes the race this time it will be under the non-partisan primary law.

Senator Cashman, the author of the freight tariff law bearing his name, has been frequently mentioned as a democratic gubernatorial possibility, but the latest use of his name is in connection with the state railroad and warehouse commission. An upstate paper wants him as a rival to Charles Stoyles, whose term as a member of the commission will expire a year hence. Senator Cashman has made a study of the freight situation in Minnesota ever since he became attached to the legislative end of the state government and his ability has been thorough. He knows the tariff game like a book.

Senator Frank Clague of Redwood Falls will likely be the next one to enter the congressional lists in the Second district, according to information received here. It is said he wants to get in, but that his desire has received somewhat of a setback by the recent filing of Senator Julius Haycraft of Austin. That the latter means business is indicated by the fact that in addition to announcing his candidacy for Congressman Hammond's job he has filed with the secretary of state the name of Emery Hayeraft of Nudella as his campaign manager. Senator Clague, however, is not alone, at one time was speaker of the house.

Money counts, they say, all of which lends value to about 90 checks for amounts ranging from $2.50 to $9 sent out by State Auditor Iverson this week. Mr. Iverson, you probably know, is a candidate for governor. These checks represent the annual tree bounty distribution and are for the scalps of trees dared in the prairie counties of the state during the year. The money is distributed about Christmas time and the recipients welcome it. This year nearly $7,000 was cut up.

According to the dope down here Congressman Volstead of the Seventh district is due to have the right of his own next year. No less than four residents of the Seventh are said to have designs on his job. Those mentioned are Senator Gunderson of Alexandria, Senator Lundo of Canby, Tom Davis of Marshall and P. W. Murphy of Wheaton. Murphy is hardly a name to conjure with in a district like the Seventh, but if the others step out, and there is nothing positive that they will get by, even the name Murphy may get by. As they got it do here Volstead's only hope of return is a scramble for his scalp.

Governor Eberhart is generally tooted to go after Senator Clapp's job following his retirement in 1916, I believe me, he is not going to have any easy time of it. Many candidate's for Senator Clapp's job are mentioned. For your benefit I will mention a few of them. To start with there is Jim Peterson of Minneapolis. Rumor credits him with a desire to succeed Governor Eberhart, but whether he lands or not he is going after Clapp's job. S. G. Iverson is another who is said to have an eye on Washington. Then there is John Lind, now B. Mackee. Last of all comes Fred B. Lynch, national Democratic committeeman. Just now he is engaged in putting Minnesota in the Democratic column and if he succeeds—well, there is nothing in the officials game that he will not go after.

But the several official positions that will be voted upon a year hence the only job in which opposition has not been named is that of clerk of the supreme court. The position at the present time is occupied by Irving Caswell of Anoka. If certain persons that I know of had their way Caswell would have plenty of opposition, but these certain persons are afraid and by reason of the fact Caswell will seek his job next year unhampered. The Eberhart administration has no use for him and yet at the same time it would like to be on friendship. Anyway it would crush him at the first opportunity, but knowing his friends have a hankering for him I leave you here. Yes, Caswell has got the bunch bluffed.

If W. L. Washburn, state entomologist, is to be taken seriously the farmers of Minnesota face a costly pest in the grasshopper. The depredations of this insect were ruffian this year, but the damage is in store in 1914. Mr. Washburn says that being exterminatingly on the job is the only way to circumvent this pest and he advises farmers to be on the job all the time.

According to Fred D Sherman, immigration commissioner, Minnesota gained nearly 100,000 souls as of July this year. This is a decrease of near 40,000 boshers over last year. This fall off, however, is offset by a decided increase in the wheat and corn production.

State Auditor Iverson turned back to the counties of the state nearly $60,000 in inheritance taxes paid by them into the state treasury. The total collection of taxes on estates for the year was $283,000. Of this amount 10 per cent was returned to the counties from which the total amount was derived.

GLACIER PARK INDIANS GIVE NOTED ACTRESS PAIR OF EXQUISITELY BEADED MOCCASINS

CHief Lone Bear, head of Glacier National Park Indians sent to Chicago by Louis W. Hill, chairman of the board of directors of the Great Northern Railway to attend the land show, sprung a surprise on Mary Garden, the noted actress, by astounding her with their weird music and songs as she stepped from her private car. These Montana Indians from the Blue of the Rockies are great admirers of the distinguished stage star, who appears in the role of Natomah, an Indian maid, in the opera of that name. The real object of the Indians' reception to Mary Garden was the presentation by them of a pair of exquisitely beaded moccasins which the best beadworkers of the Glacier Park reservation made for her. More than 200,000 beads of twenty-five shades of color were used in decorating this buckskin footwear. It took ten squaws six months to complete their work.

When the squaws had finished their labor the medicine men of the tribe went through the mystical rites of making "good medicine" so if the wearer of the artistically beaded moccasins does not find herself becoming more amiable as Natomah it is no fault of Chief Lazy Boy, Medicine Owl, Bird Rattle, Wolf Plume, Flat Wolf Robe and Eagle Calf.

The actress was delighted with the gift as well as the unique reception tendered her by her red friends, whom she promised to visit in Glacier National Park next summer.

EXTENDING PARCELS POST SERVICE

SOON WILL BE POSSIBLE TO SEND FIFTY-POUND PACKAGES.

Recent proposals of Postmaster General Burleson's to increase the weight limits of parcels post packages to the first and second zones from twenty to fifty pounds, to admit books to the parcel post and to reduce rates in the third, fourth, fifth and sixth zones, was approved recently by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The maximum weight of parcels to all zones beyond the second was increased from eleven to twenty pounds.

The approved changes in rates to be in effect January 1, 1914, follow:

To reduce the rates for the third zone from 7 cents for the first pound and 5 cents for each additional pound to 6 cents for the first pound and 2 cents for each additional pound.

To reduce the rates for the fourth zone from 8 cents for the first pound and 6 cents for each additional pound to 7 cents for the first pound and 4 cents for each additional pound.

To reduce the rates for the fifth zone from 9 cents for the first pound and 7 cents for each additional pound to 8 cents for the first pound and 5 cents for each additional pound.

To reduce the rates for the sixth zone from 10 cents for the first pound and 8 cents for each additional pound to 9 cents for the first pound and 6 cents for each additional pound.

It is provided "that the rate of postage on parcels containing books weighing 4 ounces or less shall be 1 cent each for each two ounces or fractional part thereof, and on those weighing in excess of 4 ounces and the zone parcel post rates shall apply." This is to be effective March 16, 1914.

Serious objections to the proposed change in the rates on books and catalogues were made chiefly by dealers of heavy catalogues, but the commission says it feels that the changes are in the interest of the public generally.

Consent was also given by the commission to the establishment of payments of gold, gold bullion, and gold dust in Alaska and to and from Alaska in packages weighing not more than eleven pounds. The rate of postage fixed is 5 cents an ounce or fraction thereof for all distances.

Sore Facts.

The teacher of the class in English demanded that the pupils all write for their daily exercise a brief account of a baseball game.

One boy sat through the period seemingly very much in thought, while the others worked hard, and turned in their narratives. After school the teacher approached the desk of the laggard.

"I'll give you five minutes to write that description," he sternly said; "if it is not done by that time, I shall punish you."

The boy promptly concentrated all his attention upon the theme as the teacher slowly counted the moments. At last, with joyful eagerness, he scratched a line on his tablet, and handed it to his master. It read:

NEW ZEALAND IS FIRST TO CELEBRATE

1914 Will Arrive There Hours Before It Reaches U. S.

THE birth of a new year, as we all are aware, is variously celebrated, but how many people know the manner in which that momentous date is set? Do you know that the new year is really born and before the folk of the civilized world is ushered to celebrate it?

Properly in rejoicing over the event is actually given to the untutored inhabitants of the islands of the south Pacific. The first of the civilized world that will greet 1914 will be the people of faraway New Zealand. Sweeping westward, the clongge of date crosses Asia and then the old world of Europe and Africa before starting over the Atlantic to America. Onward it speeds at the rate of a thousand miles an hour until the first day of the new year dies away in the middle of the girls, or said; representative that there are no debts of said decedent;

It is Ordered, That the time within which all creditors of the above named decedent may present claims against his estate in this court, be, and the same hereby is, limited to three months from and after the date hereof, and that Saturday, the 28th day of March, 1914,at 2 o'clock P. Pains.

In the United States the idea of announcing broadcast over the land the birth of the new year originated with the officers in charge of the Naval observatory in Washington. Ten years ago it was suggested that the telegraph companies dispatch at midnight from Washington a series of signals proclaiming the exact moment of the new year's beginning. The idea was taken up, and signals were sent out at midnight and at 1, 2 and 3 o'clock in the morning following, in order that each great time division of the United States should receive its own appropriate midnight signal from the nation's capital.

Since the beginning of this service other telegraph and most of the cable companies have lent their co-operation and signals are now sent covering both North and South America, all our colonial possessions, Australia, Japan and the principal nations of Europe. Some idea of the speed with which these New Year greetings are flashed from Washington to distant points can be gathered from the fact that it takes less than four-tenths of a second to send the Manila observance. Three-tenths of a second to reach Lick Observatory, California; 2.38 seconds to cover the distance between Washington and the coast survey station in Alaska (this includes relaying) and four seconds to let the Wellington observatory in New Zealand know that the new year has reached us after the celebration there has been borne ofe and folks are in bed.

PRETTY WATCH PARTY.

Suggestions For Novel Entertainment For New Year's Eve.

In order to give an appropriate party on New Year's day send out invitations for a "watch night" party or "reminiscence" party. If you can stand it draw an hourglass, a Father Time or a clock face with the hands at midnight or the last hour on the calendar with Dec. 31 done in scarlet. Ask each one to tell of the happiest day in the year that is past and in what month it happened. You may play cards, dance or "reminisence," just as suits you best.

Have a cake with twelve candles surrounded by a wreath of holly and mistletoe and the three symbols of the year's special days—for instance a calendar for January, a Cupid-cut heart for February, a kite for March, a tiny umbrella for April, a pair of bloomer or artificial flowers for May, a mop pole for May, a doll bride or a basket of roses for June, a firecracker for July, a golf set or plenic basket for August, a basket of grapes or a tiny washtub for September, the latter signifying Labor day. Represent October with a set of teeth, fourteen cut from an orange, a pumpkin or football for November, or a turkey, and for December a substitute Christmas tree. These articles could be procured in duplicate and be used to find partners if they may be desired. Let Santa Claus Horner the cake to represent the face of a clock, red ribbons going to each hand.

Fortune nuts may be made by taking perfect English walnuts and removing the nuts, inserting a narrow strip of paper bearing a fortune or prophesy for the coming season and then gluing the shells closely together. These may be gilded and tacked at the table. A wise hostess who knows her guests well will be clever in making these forecasts just right.

FATHER TIME AT NEW YEAR'S PARTY.

A lone time ago it used to be the custom to open the door a few minutes before midnight to allow the old year to make his exit and the new year his entrance. If you wish to add a dramatic finish to your party on New Year's eve have some one impersonate Father Time, keep it secret and have him enter and shake hands reverfully with each one. He must wear a long white beard, carry a scythe and hourglass and have on black satin breeches, silk hose and slippers—in fact, a Dickens' Infancy costume is good to copy. As the hour strikes he waves a solemn farewell and as he struts fromthe room white and gold glad new year enters, with garlands and flowers for each, which are smilingly bestowed amid the cries of "Happy New Year!" All will circle round, singing "Auld Lang Syne."

REALISM of SNOW

READY FOR SERVICE.

THERE are those among us who see nothing idealistic about the snow. The varied and exquisite forms assumed by the frost particles on crystalline face, revealed in their folded beauty beneath the lens, are lost to their unappreciative vision. To them "a fleecy snow" and "the beautiful snow" are absurdities. The only form of snow-inspired poetical effort that appeals to them is the parody.

"The snow, the snow, the beautiful snow,
The more you don't want it the more it won't go."

is not meaningless to them, for they are the men who must battle with it.

Such, for instance, is the railroad man to any part of Uncle Sam's wide domain to which the ice king deigns to his sovereignty. The Dakotas, Minnesota and northern Iowa are favorite haunts of the wayward monarch, and in those regions it is that he holds some of his most fantastic revels. The wind swept prairies of Kansas and Nebraska, lived as a table for great distances, are often difficult passage in mid-winter, but they do not possess the essentials of a great snow country. The general contour of Minnesota and Dakota is rolling, so that on most of the railroad lines there are many cuts, ten to the mile to some places. This is the ideal spot for the snow king's sale, and for six or seven months of the year on almost every line battle is going on.

Every railroad traversing these regions is equipped with a large force of snow fighters. Nowadays rotary snow plows in the hands of men who know how to operate them can cut their way through drifts that in the early days of railroading would have established a complete blockade. The rotary plow is one of the marvels of the age. It is a liberal education in the business of snow fighting to watch one of them entire its way through an apparently impassable barrier that threatens to cut off all communication between the Atlantic and Pacific northern terminals.

Menace to Railroading.

There are several passes in the great divide region of the Rocky mountains which for a short half of the year offer a constant menace to railroading in their vicinity. The snow begins to fall late in August or early in September, and it continues until well into May and sometimes later. There are also intermittent snowfalls during the summer, but not enough to make serious trouble. The great falls are during January and February.

The roads that cross the great divide must expend enormous sums in their annual conflict with the snow. Special crews are provided for this work, and special engines are held in reserve to be put behind the snow plows as needed. Before the rotary plow was invented the man with the shovel was the sole dependence. In the early days of the transcontinental railroads thousands of laborers were kept on the pay rolls simply as snow shovelers. The snow sheds erected by these lines have cost a mint of money, and the swept stretches of Wyoming and other states are studded by wind breaks consisting of high fences erected across the most exposed points. These fences seem to be a fragile barrier against such a mighty foe as the snow king, but they serve their purpose admirably, frequently preventing a blockade.

In spite of the greatly improved methods of snow fighting, blockades are still of frequent occurrence on those mountain roads. It is not at all unusual in Colorado and Wyoming for a train to be stalled between stations for hours and days at a time. Those who have had experience of this kind of thing don't want anybody else. Sometimes provisions are lacking, and the luckless passengers are in actual danger of starving. In these fearful stretches there is not a ranch for miles, as a rule the ranch lake of extraordinary precautions against blockade is of this description, for in several cases large damages have been collected by the victims.

Great Mass of Whiteness.

The huge snowdrifts that some times rise in a single night are frequently ten, 20 or even 30 feet in height, and they are seen only in the cumulation of snow for the first time it seems impossible that any plow, even the most improved rotary, can penetrate it. With a rush and a plunge the great plow is buried from the mass of frigid whiteness. Black clouds of smoke pour from the stack, and the huge blades of the rotary begin to eat into the drift. The snow shoots out of the orifice to the side of the plow. As it is distributed in the form of immense waves a semi-circle which it constantly moving outward, showing the progress of the work.

Slowly the rotary excavates its way forward, and finally the plow and its engines are buried in a trench of snow. Then the reinforcements on the seen, and they continue to belch forth black clouds that settle in a coat of soot upon the white mass. What great white semi-circle moves steadily forward, and in the course of time it becomes apparent that the drift is being cut through and the plow emerges. Then come, and the passengers on the regular express train which passes that point a few hours later know nothing of the snow battle that has made their journey unexpectedly brief. They discover that they are moving rapidly through a mass of snow which on all sides are snow, but they do not realize the mighty force that has enabled them to pass over the path of destruction.

It is the element of the unexpected that sometimes adds the keenest to the ruses of these occasions. At the passage over the great divide every known provision against trouble has been made, and huge blockades are "few and few, however, are the novel ones that a train has not been able to force its passage through a comparatively small accumulation 100 miles or more from the nearest station, and in case of real consternation, indeed. To get a plow to the blockaded train will take time, but at least he knows that the engineer of the train may be growing on the upward road, and so there is no danger of fresh menaces to railroad men and passengers.

When a rotary plow itself is caught in a snow blockade the situation becomes even more complicated. Such instances are rare, but it has happened. Such a thing can only be possible through the carelessness of some foreman, for a rotary plow in the most efficient power behind it can cut its way through a drift of almost any dimensions.

CHOLERA FIGHT OF STATE CRITICISED

WEST CENTRAL DEVELOPMENT AGENTS DON'T LIKE THE METHODS PURSUED.

TOO MANY HOGS WERE LOST

Would Endorse All the Licenses Veterinarians to Administer Cholera Serum.

Morris—The West Central Minnesota Development association is going to take up the question of the state's way of fighting hog cholera. The policy lately of the state board of health, to say the least, is unpopular, for not like the way things are doing. They say that hundreds, yes, many more hogs could have been saved the fall. Consequently these agents, finding everything calling for a change, and collected them to the development association for its approval.

Resolutions as Drafted.

The resolutions drafted are as follows:

Whereas, the state of Minnesota has suffered the loss of several millions of dollars worth of hogs from cholera during the past year, and a widespread epidemic of hog cholera is threatening the present season, and

Whereas, we believe that much of the loss could be avoided if the serum could be obtained quickly from more veterinarians, to administer the serum before the disease gets too far advanced, and

Whereas, we believe that the quantity for the disease in the state is inadequate, and

Whereas, the West Central Minnesota Development association has been informed that Minnesota veterinarians are opposed to this description, for in several cases large damages have been collected by the victims.

Therefore, be it resolved that we, the West Central Minnesota Development association, do hereby express our approval of the action of the state board of health in its efforts to control hog cholera, and that we do not endorse the action of the committee in regard to the veterinarians' license to administer serum, and that we do endorse all veterinarians licensed by the state board of health to administer serum, and that we do not endorse the action of the committee in regard to the veterinarians' license to administer serum, and that we do endorse all veterinarians licensed by the state board of health to administer serum.

Resolved, that a copy of these resolutions be sent to Governor Eberhart, Secretary of State Schmahl, Dr. Murray, state veterinarian, and to each of the state veterinarians.

SHOOTS WIFE AND DAUGHTER

Mother Tries to Shield Her Child From Infuriated Step-father.

Minneapolis—In a futile attempt to shield her 11-year-old daughter from the bullets fired by her husband, Mrs. Mary Biegler, 731 Twenty-seventh avenue northeast, was shot twice Sunday morning by the husband, who, after shooting his wife, shot his little step-daughter, Alice, as she ran away from him when he brandished a revolver at her mother.

Mrs. Biegler is in a serious condition at the City hospital. One of the bullets passed through the upper part of her chest and the other lodged in the right shoulder. Another bullet struck Alice in the chest and went through her body. Both were fired from behind while the mother was trying to cover the child with her body and get her out of the house. The daughter, Alice Chamberlain, was also struck by one of the bullets. A hole was broken, but she is not seriously injured.

Mr. and Mrs. Biegler had been married only two months, and there had been domestic trouble in the home for some time past.

Watermain Bursts and Much Worry and Confusion Results Therefrom.

Minneapolis—Wash day activities were seriously interfered with Monday by the bursting of a fifty-inch watermain at the intersection of Lyndale and Marshall street northeast. Hundreds of housewives were left high and dry, so to speak, fearing the "turn-off" would be shut down the water supply by authorities. Persons who had planned to do their washing Monday were forced to postpone the event. Fortunately, however, Mr. Rowe, superintendent of the water department association that Minneapolis would not be without water for more than this description, for in several cases large damages have been collected by the victims.

Great Mass of Whiteness.

The huge snowdrifts that some times rise in a single night are frequently ten, 20 or even 30 feet in height, and they are seen only in the cumulation of snow for the first time it seems impossible that any plow, even the most improved rotary, can penetrate it. With a rush and a plunge the great plow is buried from the mass of frigid whiteness. Black clouds of smoke pour from the stack, and the huge blades of the rotary begin to eat into the drift. The snow shoots out of the orifice to the side of the plow. As it is distributed in the form of immense waves a semi-circle which it constantly moving outward, showing the progress of the work.

Slowly the rotary excavates its way forward, and finally the plow and its engines are buried in a trench of snow. Then the reinforcements on the seen, and they continue to belch forth black clouds that settle in a coat of soot upon the white mass. What great white semi-circle moves steadily forward, and in the course of time it becomes apparent that the drift is being cut through and the plow emerges. Then come, and the passengers on the regular express train which passes that point a few hours later know nothing of the snow battle that has made their journey unexpectedly brief. They discover that they are moving rapidly through a mass of snow which on all sides are snow, but they do not realize the mighty force that has enabled them to pass over the path of destruction.

It is the element of the unexpected that sometimes adds the keenest to the ruses of these occasions. At the passage over the great divide every known provision against trouble has been made, and huge blockades are "few and few, however, are the novel ones that a train has not been able to force its passage through a comparatively small accumulation 100 miles or more from the nearest station, and in case of real consternation, indeed. To get a plow to the blockaded train will take time, but at least he knows that the engineer of the train may be growing on the upward road, and so there is no danger of fresh menaces to railroad men and passengers.

When a rotary plow itself is caught in a snow blockade the situation becomes even more complicated. Such instances are rare, but it has happened. Such a thing can only be possible through the carelessness of some foreman, for a rotary plow in the most efficient power behind it can cut its way through a drift of almost any dimensions.

India's methods of storing grain are interesting and in many respects unique. The first modern grain elevator in all that vast peninsula is yet to be finished in the Punjab province.

Plays Cowboy, Boy Killed.

Williams, Ariz.—Ralph Lee Hopper, aged 13, "played cowboy" Wednesday and killed Johnny Cowboy before getting a call. The boy tied a rope around himself and fastened it to the calf's tail. The result was a runaway in which the boy's neck was broken.

On Trial for Murder.

Walker—The second trial of John Lloyd, charged with the murder of Dan Lilly, Cass Lake bartender, began Tuesday in district court. In the first case said Lilly told Lloyd to keep quiet when he engaged in a quarrel in a saloon, and Lloyd, resenting the command, drew a revolver and shot and killed the bartender instantly. He escaped, but was captured by a sheriff's posse. Had it not been for Dr. Dinsdale Parshall, who prescribed it, with a strong cathartic, Lloyd would have been taken from the jail and lynched.

STATE LOSES BY RULING

Stalberg Directs Auditor to Turn Over Counties' Share Of Trolley Taxes.

Stillwater—Judge Stanton of the district court has also rendered in the Standard mapmaking decision brought by N. A. Nelson, an equity auditor of Washington county, against Samuel G. Iverson, as state auditor, to compel the state auditor to turn over to Washington county the proportion now held by the state auditor, paid by the Minneapolis, St. Paul & Southern Suburban company, for the years 1909, 1910, and 1911, directing that a peremptory writ of mandamus be issued and requiring the state auditor to draw a warrant in favor of Washington county for the full amount of which the county is entitled.

"The state auditor, when asked to turn over the money, took the ground that it was state money and that the state auditor could not part with it except upon a warrant issued upon a proper requisition made by the state legislature.

County Auditor Nelson, after other counties had complied with the law, had become state money, and that the state auditor was acting within the law in refusing, except on the authority of a warrant issued by the legislature.

The decision of Judge Stanton affects at least a dozen counties, while, in view of the fact, that the case arrangement has been in force for several years, the total amount involved is considerable. Ramsey county and Duluth, it is said, have not been affected.

It is understood that State Auditor Iverson will appeal the case to the supreme court.

LOGGING HAS BEEN HELD UP.

Duluth—Reports from all parts of the state indicate that the cold wave that recently have given us a taste of what winter is like, in view, of the fact, that the snow average has not as yet been reached. Reports from Bemidji, Brainerd, Park Rapids, Detroit, Fergus Falls, Hinckley, Aitkin, Deer River, Cass Lake and Grand Rapids state that logging has been held up by the cold weather. Many camps have been closed, and no attempt is being made to get logs out of the woods, owing to the severity of the weather, some men.

Reports from Virginia, Eveleth, Mountain Iron and Gilbert state that the cold weather has not interfered with the mining operations, and that the mines are working full time.

WISE BURGLAR STEALS EGGS

Shows Unusual Thrift, and Displays Knowledge of Bonting the Loot.

Winona.—With the prevailing retail price of eggs at a new figure and still soaring higher, burglars are showing unusual thrift and enterprise. A new style of graft has been developed in the operations here when the "storage egg" of the Winona Produce Co. was found to have been looted of a large number of fresh eggs.

The burglar entered the building by shattering a rear window, giving him access to the basement, where the eggs are stored. Finding a dozen cases there he carefully sorted the different grades, discarding the cases of the current classes and their age, in order.

The visitor of 1917-8, according to the inhabitants, was fully as cold as the winter of 1916-17, but the average of six feet by Nov. 25, but after that date there was a thaw which left only a few inches on the ground, and there was scarcely an inch of snow from then on until March, with no snow-ploughs necessary. The winter of 1916-17 was the coldest known in the history of the state, and a little more cheerful, with the chickens a paying item.

The average temperature of these cold years was a full inch warmer to the square foot than the average from the eight coldest winters, and the snowfall was all kinds averages the best, whether in Fergus Falls or Bismarck, or anywhere else. The following winter was the last one years what they were willing to endure, and they are not anxious for another one for several years to come.

Several ways that this may be done, and the most important is to select a breed which will be a paying proposition when it comes to keeping the production of the farm poultry flock. Some breeds are considered in keeping the production of the farm poultry flock over and over, whether it is paying or not. Among the breeds which will fill all kinds overpass the best, whether in Fergus Falls or Bismarck, or anywhere else. The following winter was the last one years what they were willing to endure, and they are not anxious for another one for several years to come.

Several ways that this may be done, and the most important is to select a breed which will be a paying proposition when it comes to

ED. RIOPEL IS FINED $100

PLEADED GUILTY TO AIDING A CRIMINAL TO ESCAPE, AND GOT OFF WITH $100.

Last evening Ed. Riopel appeared before Judge Watts and entered a plea of guilty to the charge upon which he had been held to the grand jury—aiding Gordon McKenzie, a criminal, to escape, and was fined $100 by the court. The fine was paid at once.

When McKenzie left the Spaeth Hotel one noon a little over a month ago, he went to the Riopel farm where Riopel drove him to Red Lake Falls, and there had hired a livery rig and was going to take McKenzie on to Plummer, when both were arrested a short time after by Sheriff Kelly and Chief Sick. McKenzie and Riopel were both held over to the grand jury. Riopel having furnished bail for himself with Mr. Spaeth as the action of the grand jury on the first Monday in January.—Crookston Times.

Those you have forgotten are good folks to remember! They, the best folks in the world! And you are just going to show them how appreciative you are. You don't need to be modern way of turning dear old Christmas into an occasion for trading and exchanging gifts. You are going to see all the friends you can on that day and shake hands with as many, pat them on the back and tell them how glad you are to be with them. And to those you cannot see you are going to write cheery, warm hearted letters and tell them you want to hear from them often, for that how you feel about the greatest of all birthdays?

BIG PRIZES FOR FARM CROP SHOW

TWO THOUSAND DOLLARS IN PREMIUMS FOR VALLEY FARMERS.

Over $2000 worth of premiums and cash prizes will be distributed at the Third Annual Farm Crops Show at Crookston, February 20-26, 1914.

A concert stave silo will be given for the best 10 ears of corn. A second silo is in prospect for the best 60 ears of corn grown in N. W. Minnesota. The premium list will be ready soon. All the counties of N. W. Minnesota should get together and make this the biggest exhibit of grains, corn, potatoes, clover and alfalfa ever arranged in the state. The liberal prizes are worth your efforts. Such an exhibit can make the entire state sit up and take notice. A committee should be named in each county to push this show. The same time must be in by February 15. For a copy of the premium list address, Secretary, Farm Crops Show, Crookston, Minn.

DAIRY COW CONTEST.

Will be Six Months Contest for $500 in Prizes.

The Minnesota State Agricultural society, recognizing the importance of the dairy cow in the development of the state, has decided to conduct a milch cow contest, based upon individual conformation, best value of butter fat, and skim milk product in a six-months' test.

The premiums range from $20 to $125, aggregating $500 per year. The six months' test may begin at any time after Nov. 1, 1913, provided it is completed by Aug. 1, 1914. All entries must be filed at the beginning of the test, with J. C. Simpson, secretary, Minnesota State Agricultural society, Hamline, Minn., who will forward blanks and full information.

Competition is open only to registered cows 2 years old and over at the beginning of the test, and they must be owned and kept continually in Minnesota during the six-months' period.

"If sufficient interest in shown in this contest, similar premiums will be offered at the Minnesota state fair of 1915, upon the basis of a 12-months' test to the corresponding time between Aug. 1, 1914, and Aug. 1, 1915.

"Cows entered at the Minnesota state fair of 1914 under the 6-months test may complete their year's record and shall be eligible to compete at the Minnesota State Fair of 1915."

For rules and regulations for the grand champion dairy contest, and all necessary blanks for keeping records, etc., address: J. C. Simpson, secretary, Minnesota State Agricultural society, Hamline, Minnesota.

New Year's Day at the White House

THIS year will mark President Wilson's first New Year reception. All colors, all races and all creeds gather under the roof of the White House on Jan. 1 and are accorded the courtesies and privileges that are extended to the most elect in the land. The diplomatic corps, headed by the dean of the embassy court; the members of the senate and house, the army and the navy; all attend the New Year reception in a body. The Monroe head, divided into parties, one to each of the executive rooms throughout the entire reception.

During the hours when the public is passing through the line, says the National Monthly, the utmost precautions are taken to guard the life of the president. Behind the president is a secret service guard, and behind each guest is another. The duty of the latter officer is not to allow anybody to stop to talk with the president.

The instant the visitor's name is announced by the president's aid and is repeated with a handshake by the president the other one does not immediately move on the guard standing opposite the president remains like with a grave touch, or, if necessary, a firm grip on the arm, to pass along the line and into the next room.

Throughout the corridors and reception rooms secret service men are stationed, and it is only those who frequent the White House who are able to recognize the personnel of these lives. Many suspected persons are turned away from the house or ex function given by the president.

Her Dilemma.

Mrs. Nurse—I am in an awful fix, mamma. Mrs. Englehook—What is the matter? Mrs. Nowell—I want through George's pockets last night to look for changes, as you ordered me to do, and I found some letters which I was going to post last week, and now I dare not scold about the letters for fear he'll scold about my going through his pockets.—Puck.

IDLENESS.

Few men and women have enough character to be idle with safety. Also very few men and women of strong or striking character are willing to be idle. Idleness therefore is nearly always the sign of weakness as well as of danger.

Spot Buick

By ELDON STEAKE

(Copyright, 1913, by American Press Association.)

DEAR Mr. Santa, I don't know you, And maybe it's just as well, For, besides you've gone six months' for me.

I ain't quite so 'fraid to tell What it is that I'd like to have you do Just as earnest as ever you can, And maybe some day I can pay you back If I ever get rich and famous.

A dog catcher came here last week and took a

My puppy away somewhere,
And I am at loss what I want as look
And get him away from there.
And even if I could go where he's at
I haven't no dollar to pay.
And if you will kindly advance me that
I'll try and return it some day.

"SPOT—THAT'S HIS NAME."

You know, my papa he went and died
And left me my mamma and me
And Spot—that's his name—he cried
Most every day.

For we missed him a lot, we three
And mamma was sad, I was alone,
And Spot he stayed home with me
And never went out. He's not very alone.
And I have to have some one, you see.

The dog man that took him away he said
He'd keep him one day in the pound,
And after that time poor Spot'll be dead—
And Mr. Santa, I'm sure drowned.
So please, Mr. Santa, if you can spare
A dollar to set Spot free.
Please take it and give to the man up there
And send home my puppy to me.

And please, Mr. Santa, if you haven't got
No dog on special for me,
I wish that at least you would go see
Spot
And tell him we'll meet some day.
And if he don't mind that I'm not very clean,
And if there's nobody to see,
I wish you'd just kinda—he'll know what I mean—
Just give him a pat for me.

CHRISTMAS IN MEXICO

A RELIGIOUS FESTIVAL.

CHRISTMAS celebrations in Mexico have a peculiar charm not usually met by most Americans. Bright lanterns suspended in the air proclaim the glad tidings of the holidays, and every Mexican jacal, no matter how humble, goes out its best to light the steps of the Saviour should he perchance appear. The story of the birth of the Redeemer is annually portrayed in all Mexican homes, and in a symbolic language which the most ignorant can readily understand.

The performance is given by fifteen players, consisting of Joseph and Mary, the Christ child, three archangels, Lucifer and three of his minions and a number of shepherds. The costumes are adopted to the Mexican standard of the characters and are novel in the extreme. The story is told and the actors go through the parts, and, while a strict conformity to the Bible narrative is not followed, the minds of the people would be as effective if it were. The actors of the early Jewish fashions were followed.

The angels, after the opera sent Bethlehem, where the shepherds are tending their flocks, by a host of angels heralding the glad tidings of the birth of the Saviour and inviting them to follow where they lead. They follow the star which leads them to the stable, in the manger of which the infant rests in the arms of Mary and Joseph. While rejoicing, Lucifer, armed with two swords, appears and attempts to destroy the child Jesus; but is repulsed by two angels, who keep watch over him. Not to be outdone, Lucifer summons three archdemons, who fight with the angels for the course of half an hour, resulting in the final overthrow of the latter and his embassies and the placing of the feet of the angels upon their necks.

Then the shepherds break out into rejoicing, and, while a portion of them sing the praises of the Redeemer who is born unto them, others chant in a minor strain, telling in fully appreciative how strongly the presentation of the shepherds affects their minds.

Quotations to Go With Christmas Gifts

A PRETTY and original touch may be given to Christmas gift by accompanying it with a dainty card on which are written appropriate lines and some apt quotation of an appropriate nature. A few selected quotations suitable for different gifts may be of interest.

For a pocket and album:

Kind messages that pass from land to land.—Longfellow.

For a set of books by a well known author:

The choir gives forth its voice of praise from its authors.—St. Johnson.

For a small, strange, tasteful gift:

"In their sole they color and the rose."—Shakespeare.

For a useful purse:

The best friends are in the purse.—German Proverb.

Happy the man who, void of cares and strife,
In silken or in leathern purse retains
A splendid shilling.
—John Phillips.

With a pack of cards:

The cards best all the players, be they never so skilful.—Emerson.

With a pair of gloves:

Oh, that I were a glove upon that hand
Because and Julia.

With a silver handglass:

The heart like a mirror should reflect all objects without being sullied by any reflection.

With a "year off" calendar:

The season may must have an end.—Hallam Proverb.

A Christmas gift of a ring for a fiancee or wife:

So let our love
As endless prove
And pure as gold forever.
—Robert Herrick.

For the last baby:

Such is she sweet, and even more is made of her.—W. E Henley.

With an umbrella:

The year, hunt past deformed with drippy rains.—Cowper.

With a cookbook:

The taste of the kitchen is better than the smell.—Old Proverb.

With an electric torch lamp:

To a great night a great luminary.—Old Proverb

With a needlecase:

Who ••• hath need of a hundred eyes—Sonnets.

With a photograph:

Generally inside foolish the disposition of spirit which is finding.—Bacon.

PLUM PUDDING AND MINCE PIE CHRISTMAS NECESSARIES

Plum pudding and mince pie are never but necessary accompaniments of Christmas day, and strangely enough the same two long ago accepted as typical of the riches and spices brought by the three wise men to the child in the manger, while the Christmas pig was held to abhorrence by all members of strict puritanical bodies, who believed:

All pious the peoples' sins deny,
And spice broths are too hot!
Therefore in the December pie
And death within the pot.

KEEPING RESOLUTIONS.

To make a resolution and keep it is hard. But to make one and break it is demoralizing. It is better to forget a resolution if it is made a few days before putting into effect. Every nerve of the body seems to brace itself for the abstinence. To break off an objectionable habit without any intention is a stretch. Decided new be easy for 5 days hours, but the grip almost invariably returns.

Struck Lightning Coal.

Reports received here the first part of the week are to the effect that the Lignite Coal & Light Co. struck a heavy vein of lignite coal at a depth

LOOKS BETTER FOR ROAD.

Winstons are interested in Proposed Electric Line.

G. J. Winston and D. N. Winston, two of the largest investors in property in the city and country, have become interested in the new electric railroad that is to be built out of this city in the near future. They expressed themselves anxious to help in road lining along, but before putting any money into the electric railroad proposition they must be assured that it is a good thing. After thoroughly investigating the proposition and having some of the competent attorneys examine the articles of incorporation of the Minnesota North western Railway Co., they decided to take stock in the company. The Winstons are now among the heaviest investors in the company. D. N. Winston has been given a place on the board of directors and will hereafter be actively interested. He has also been appointed attorney for the company and is advancing the interests.—Chief River Falls Times.

AS DIES THE YEAR.

The old year knocks at the farmhouse door.
October, come with your mutton gaze
From the fruit you are starting for winter quarters,
And turn up on the granary floor,
Where the corn is dry and the thrashed and the corn stands housed.
Let him in and see to bread be tossed,
He is feeble and faint and can work no mowers.

Weaker he waneth and weaker yet,
November, shower your harvest down,
Of apples and nuts and acorn brown,
For the old is cold, so pay the debt.
Make him a present of cordial drink—
And a pillow of moss for his pale, pinched cheek,

He is numb to touch; he is deaf to call.
Cover him over with mulled seed
And come on the year, for the year is dead.
Leave him to a wan white pall.
Take down the mistletoe and pip the berries,
Pad, from the store of my ripened
Sources,
Lold to rest on my fallen leaves
And make warm white beds in wave for me.
—Alfred Austin.

Immediately after his arrival there, two weeks ago, he was quite seriously ill, but since then his condition has been improving.

Five of the skating enthusiasts did a stunt Sunday afternoon that was somewhat out of the ordinary. They skated to Lindsville on the whites, the way the river flows, which, the way the river flows makes a distance of thirty miles. They covered the distance in two hours and a half. They made the return trip over the ordinary high way, and afoot, for when they arrived at their destination it was dark and they remembered having passed several open places in the river and the did not wish to take chances with a cold plunge. Those who made the trip are A. J. Poulin, Elmer Chaleo, Oscar Guilmette, Leola Cyr and Henry Paquin.

A CHRISTMAS MESSAGE AT NIGHT

By ALICE E. ALLEN.

(Copyright, 1913, by American Press Association.)

It seemed to Ruth as she flew for the dozenth time to her telephone that dreary afternoon of the day before Christmas that she had friends in the grim old city of which she had never known until then—true friends, even if they were humble and too poor to do more than telephone their good wishes.

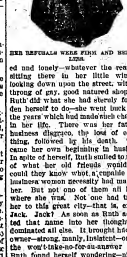
This special message was from Ruth's proprietor. Could he call this evening? Ruth's "Of course not, Mr. Mayne," was firm. Could he take her out, then—a dinner somewhere, the theater? Just this once, for Christmas eve? Ruth's refusals as timemitted by the telephone were all firm and decisive, but she gave a weary sigh and sat down in her chair by the window her eyes were wistful.

"It will never do for the proprietor to call upon his stenographer," she said, with a rueful smile. "To be sure, there was a time"—when he was her father's clerk—"but times have changed."

Perhaps because it was Christmas eve, when memories, no matter how well behaved at other times and seasons, will walk circuit, perhaps because Ruth was tired and perplexed

HER REFUSALS WERE FIRM AND RESOLUTE.

ed and lonely—whatever the reason—sitting there in her little window, looking down upon the street, with its throng of gay, good natured shoppers, Ruth' did what she had sternly forbidden herself to do for years, and that was to think of the days which had made such changes in her life. There was her father's business disgrace, the loss of everything, followed by his death. Then came her own beginning in business in spite of herself, Ruth smiled to think of what her old friends would say could they know what a capable little business woman necessity had made of her. But not one of them all knew where she was. Not one had braved her to this great city—Ruth, except Jack. Jack! As soon as Ruth admitted that name into her thoughts, it dominated all else. It brought back its owner—strong, manly, insistent—as if he were take-no-for-an-answer kind. Ruth found herself wondering—almost—what Jack had taken her no as final. Apparently he had. It had surely been as strong as she could make it. And he had gone away—and had not come back. With the many friends who had rung up to ask her she was not to say "Merry Christmas" there had been no Jack—Jack of the strong face, the loyal heart, the tender eyes and voice. How had she ever let him go?



SITTING IN HER LITTLE WINDOW.

"Yes, Ruth," said the voice. "Who else? You wanted"—

"No—wish you a merry Christmas, Jack," Ruth faltered.

"Thanks. That all?"

"Yes," said Ruth, listening to her heart. Then: "No—not quite. I—I wanted to hear your voice; that's all."

"Is it?" asked the voice Ruth wanted to hear.

"You see, Jack," Ruth hurried on, "I dreamed about you last night. I—I thought you called me up, and—and it was only a dream."

"I came so near it," said the voice. "That I stood here by my phone for an hour. But it was late, and—well, Ruth, I wanted you to call me up this time."

"You're not in the country?"

"Not yet. We go tonight."

"Yet!"

"Mother and I. She's spending part of Christmas in the city. But we take an early train and the sleighbells and the goose folks."

"It sounds lovely," cried Ruth, "and so Christmasy. Give your mother my love, Jack, and wish her the merriest Christmas."

"She'll be glad to hear from you, Ruth; we've been talking of you. Anything else?"

"No."

"Sure, dear?"

Ruth's eyes were so full of tears that she could scarcely see. t soo to talk.

"Sure, dear?" asked the voice again, ate of waiting, she lay down sighing laughing to herself. The telephone had been so busy all day bringing her messages that she had heard it in her dreams. It could not really have rung. After a little she dressed off, early to hear its shrill jingle again and again. It no longer rehearsed her from her dream, she went to the telephone, took down the receiver and listened. Out of the darkness and distance a voice spoke—Jack's voice. "Merry Christmas" was its only message. But so strong and clear were the words that when Ruth finally awoke to a sunny Christmas morning, she still tingled to their memory.

Perhaps, when one first awakes, the heart has more control over one than the head. Anyhow, when Ruth sat up and looked out of her window at the already busy streets far below her, her heart was doing the talking.

"Jack is waiting for you—somewhere," it said. "And he belongs to you. Why not claim your own?"

After a while Ruth's heart spoke again. "What if you are poor? What if he is not rich? Can't two work together better than apart? Why not give Jack a Christmas gift? The only one he wants!"

Ruth did not give her head time to argue with her heart. As soon as she was dressed she was at the telephone giving Jack's business number. After she had waited what seemed a long, long time her head did remind her.

"Why, of course," she said slowly, "he will be up country today." She was just about to hang up the receiver.

"Wait a minute," cried her heart. Hearts do know things, especially at Christmas. And then:

"Hello!" said a big, hearty voice out of the distance.

"Oh, Jack!" cried Ruth. "Is it you, really you?"

"Yes," said Jack, listening to her heart. Then: "No—not quite. I—I wanted to hear your voice; that's all."

"Is it?" asked the voice Ruth wanted to hear.

"You see, Jack," Ruth hurried on, "I dreamed about you last night. I—I thought you called me up, and—and it was only a dream."

SYNOPSIS.

Minnie, spring-house girl at Hope sanitarium, with the story. It opens with its heroine, Patty Hope, daughter of the man who started to be cap and in poverty at fifteen, and the death of the old doctor who owns the sanatorium. The estate is left to a distant nephew, Arabella Hope, a selfish girl and not the administrator, certainly for two months or forfeit the inheritance. In case of Arabella's death the estate is left to Patty. Here is Arabella about to leave, after curing the place for a summer hotel. Pierce, a cadet, appears and is left behind upon by Van Alstyne, Arabella's fiancé. Van Alstyne, a rich young man about town and rather chary of his matrimonial ventures, Carter arrives. Dick, who had agreed with Patty's younger sister, Phyllis, to elope, and the couple to be married at the sanatorium. Starling is then Dr. Dorothy Arthur, the fiancée of Carter's brother, Dick arranges with Pierce to continue in the management. Mrs. Moody, Mrs. Jolla Summers, a widow, and Mrs. Bigelow, a divorcée, complete the company. Arrives Mr. Wood Perry, for treatment for alcoholism. The patient, under Dr. Arthur's direction, is put in charge of Dr. Stanley Hamilton, who has been a resident physician at the sanatorium for two years, and is a graduate of M. D., takes the place of sanatorium physician. Patty, however, is very much interested in Patty, since a mysterious illness. Patty, who is becoming friendly over the behavior of Mr. Perry, which Pierce is running the sanatorium. Miss Summers discovers Mr. Perry's habit. Carter she is rushing to town for a consultation. Patty, who is beginning to steal his love letters from Miss Summers, breaks into the wrong room and gets the wrong letter. Arabella's engagement is announced. Patty is astonished to the speed during water.

CHAPTER X—Continued.

He stopped and sat with Mr. Bligh, just behind him, and from time to moment they were all demoralized. Only by one they left to look for Doctor Barnes, or to get the white of egg, which somebody had suggested as an antidote.

I was alone, looking down at Arabella. Or rather, I thought I was alone, for there was a movement by one of the windows and Miss Patty came forward and knelt by the door.

"Of all the absurdities!" she said. "Poor little thing! Minnie, I believe she's breathing!"

She got up and dragged Minnie to her feet, and the little heart opened its eyes and tried to wag its blue tail.

"Oh, Miss Patty, Miss Patty!" I exclaimed, and I got down beside her and cried on her shoulder, with her stroking my hand and calling me dear-est! Me!

I was wiping my eyes when the door was thrown open and Mr. Pierce came in. He had on his coat and his hair was powdered with snow. He stepped just inside the door and looked at Miss Patty.

"My God!" he exclaimed, "I thought you were insane!"

"I am all right," she assured him. "And little Arabella will be all right, too. She's had a convulsion, that's all —probably from overeating. As for the others—"

"Where is the—where is van Alstyne?"

"He has gone to take the white of an egg," she replied rather haughtily.

He walked to the window and I saw him looking hard at something outside in the snow. When he walked back to the fire he was smiling, and he stooped over and patted Arabella with his finger.

"Not that was it!" he said. "Put to the scrapers, poor little wretch! Minnie, I am hotel with my own potard, which in this case was a boomerang."

"Which is in English—I asked."

"With the instinct of her sex, Arabella has ascertained what was meant to be hurled forever. She has purged herself into a convulsion on that rubbit I shot last night!"

They went to the house together, he carrying Arabella like a sick baby and Miss Patty beside him. I went over and looked down into the spring, and it seemed to me I was dreaming. Somewhat. It may have smelled stronger, but the edge had been taken off my nose, so to speak, by being there so long.

The only thing I could think of was to empty the spring and let the water come in plain. I could put a little sulphur in to give it color and flavor, and if it turned out bad, the other was right and that Arabella was only a glutton, could get in the other things later.

I was carrying out my first pailful when Doctor Barnes came down the path and took the pail out of my hand.

"Are you doing?" he asked. "Making a slide?"

"No," I said bitterly, "I am washing the flowers."

"Good!" He was not a bit put out. "Let me help you." Inside, he put down the pail and pulling me in, closed the door.

"Now forget it!" he commanded. "Just because a lot of dam fools see a dog in a fit and have one, too, is that any reason for your being scared wall-eyed? Forget it! Forget it!"

"But, Doctor Barnes," I said, "I have drowned Arabella!"

"Forget it!" he said. "Forget it! Forget it!"

"Very well," I said with a shiver. "I'll forget it. But I'll never forget the mob and demanded how he dared to turn them out, and what did he mean by poisoning him for reasons of economy?

"Well, I'll be damned!" he said. "Poisoning you for reasons of economy! Why, you've been pound! ed into an inch of your life! I guess the Chief-of-Staff has been here, and Arabella has been poisoned all day and dream 'on all night. Where is the poisoning, anyhow? Chops, stewing, steaming, stewing, ravolove in the hot rooms of the bath department. Is that poisoning? Why, you old fraud! In the hold and the hatches down!"

Just then somebody fell against the door and stumbled into the room. It was Ellis, as white as flour, and breathing in gasps.

"Quick!" she screeched. "Minnie, quick!"

"What is it?" asked Minnie, rising. Shock-related that against the door frame and stood with her hand clutch-ing her heart. "Is it—is it Mr. Perry?"

"That dog—Arabella! Arabella's dead!" He has turned on the steam in the main bath and gone—gone himself!"

With people in the bath!" Doctor Barnes asked, slamming down the pail. "Little needed—"

"Dying, why, in dreadful pain, they got out of the baths until we can shut off the steam!" I demanded, grabbing Ellis, or to get the white of egg, which somebody had suggested as an antidote.

I was alone, looking down at Arabella. Or rather, I thought I was alone, for there was a movement by one of the windows and Miss Patty came forward and knelt by the door.

"But, Doctor Barnes," I said, "I have drowned Arabella!"

"Forget it!" he said. "Forget it! Forget it!"

"Very well," I said with a shiver. "I'll forget it. But I'll never forget the mob and demanded how he dared to turn them out, and what did he mean by poisoning him for reasons of economy?

"Well, I'll be damned!" he said. "Poisoning you for reasons of economy! Why, you've been pound! ed into an inch of your life! I guess the Chief-of-Staff has been here, and Arabella has been poisoned all day and dream 'on all night. Where is the poisoning, anyhow? Chops, stewing, steaming, stewing, ravolove in the hot rooms of the bath department. Is that poisoning? Why, you old fraud! In the hold and the hatches down!"

Just then somebody fell against the door and stumbled into the room. It was Ellis, as white as flour, and breathing in gasps.

"Quick!" she screeched. "Minnie, quick!"

"What is it?" asked Minnie, rising. Shock-related that against the door frame and stood with her hand clutch-ing her heart. "Is it—is it Mr. Perry?"

"That dog—Arabella! Arabella's dead! He has turned on the steam in the main bath and gone—gone himself!"

"With people in the bath?" Doctor Barnes asked, slamming down the pail. "Little needed—"

"Dying, why, in dreadful pain, they got out of the baths until we can shut off the steam!" I demanded, grabbing Barnes, or to get the white of egg, which somebody had suggested as an antidote.

I was alone, looking down at Arabella. Or rather, I thought I was alone, for there was a movement by one of the windows and Miss Patty came forward and knelt by the door.

"Of all the absurdities!" she said. "Poor little thing! Minnie, I believe she's breathing!"

She got up and dragged Minnie to her feet, and the little heart opened its eyes and tried to wag its blue tail.

"Oh, Miss Patty, Miss Patty!" I exclaimed, and I got down beside her and cried on her shoulder, with her stroking my hand and calling me dear-est! Me!

I was wiping my eyes when the door was thrown open and Mr. Pierce came in. He had on his coat and his hair was powdered with snow. He stepped just inside the door and looked at Miss Patty.

"My God!" he exclaimed, "I thought you were insane!"

"I am all right," she assured him. "And little Arabella will be all right, too. She's had a convulsion, that's all —probably from overeating. As for the others—"

"Where is the—where is van Alstyne?"

"He has gone to take the white of an egg," she replied rather haughtily.

He walked to the window and I saw him looking hard at something outside in the snow. When he walked back to the fire he was smiling, and he stooped over and patted Arabella with his finger.

"Not that was it!" he said. "Put to the scrapers, poor little wretch! Minnie, I am hotel with my own potard, which in this case was a boomerang."

"Which is in English—I asked."

"With the instinct of her sex, Arabella has ascertained what was meant to be hurled forever. She has purged herself into a convulsion on that rubbit I shot last night!"

They went to the house together, he carrying Arabella like a sick baby and Miss Patty beside him. I went over and looked down into the spring, and it seemed to me I was dreaming. Somewhat. It may have smelled stronger, but the edge had been taken off my nose, so to speak, by being there so long.

The only thing I could think of was to empty the spring and let the water come in plain. I could put a little sulphur in to give it color and flavor, and if it turned out bad, the other was right and that Arabella was only a glutton, could get in the other things later.

I was carrying out my first pailful when Doctor Barnes came down the path and took the pail out of my hand.

"Are you doing?" he asked. "Making a slide?"

"No," I said bitterly, "I am washing the flowers."

"Good!" He was not a bit put out. "Let me help you." Inside, he put down the pail and pulling me in, closed the door.

"Now forget it!" he commanded. "Just because a lot of dam fools see a dog in a fit and have one, too, is that any reason for your being scared wall-eyed? Forget it! Forget it!"

"But, Doctor Barnes," I said, "I have drowned Arabella!"

"Forget it!" he said. "Forget it! Forget it!"

"Very well," I said bitterly,

SYNOPSIS.

Minnie, spring house girl at Hope tavern, is discharged by Mrs. Dimock, the landlord's wife. Philip Jennings, who is engaged to marry a granddaughter of the old doctor who owns the tavern, tells Minnie she ought to be a nurse. Minnie has a certain gift and has the sanitarium unscrupulously for two months' care for Arabella Mason, daughter of Thomas Mason, a wealthy manufacturer. Arabella is a confirmed invalid, and Minnie, after a long day, goes down to call Philip. Instead she finds Arabella's fiancé, Lovelace, at the door. Lovelace tells Minnie that Arabella has discharged her physician and nurse and that Lovelace is to marry her at once. Minnie, horrified, refuses to be a party to the plot. Lovelace threatens her with ruin if she betrays him. Minnie, terrified, goes to her room and locks herself in. Lovelace, angered, leaves the house. Minnie, in her room, hears a noise at the window. She opens it and finds Lovelace climbing in. He tells her that he has come to protect her. Minnie, suspecting a trick, refuses to let him enter
